The building and loan association movement has expanded greatly in the last decade. In 1912 there were about 6,300 associations in the United States, and by 1924 this number had increased to nearly 11,000. Membership in associations increased from 2,500,000 to more than 7,200,000, and total assets of associations from $1,000,000,000 to $3,900,000,000.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Herriot Cabinet in Peril—Hindenburg Nominated by German Nationalists.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

AT THIS writing the downfall of the Herriot government of France is momentarily expected, because of the determined opposition in parliament to its financial plan. Already the premier has met defeat in the senate on a minor issue, and though he was persuaded not to quit on that account, it was believed the cabinet would soon be overthrown.

Anatole de Monzie, the new minister of finance, offered to parliament his scheme for meeting the financial crisis. This, briefly, is a camouflaged capital levy of 10 per cent on French wealth and an increase of paper currency to the extent of 4,000,000,000 francs (roughly, $200,000,000). The levy is disguised as a "voluntary contribution" in return for 3 per cent bonds, payments to be made at twenty-three-month intevals. Wage earners employed at physical labor and those drawing salaries below a fixed sum are exempt. All others must contribute 10 per cent of their wealth, under penalty. The people of France as a whole did not seem especially opposed to this measure, but the finance committee of the chambers had many changes to offer and the opposition parties attacked the plan vigorously. The currency inflation is not considered so serious since the Bank of France already has issued more francs than the legal limit, but the "forced voluntary contribution" is being fought especially by the nationalist bloc and the reactionaries. M. de Monzie says he hopes to raise 15,000,000,000 francs ($750,000,000) during five years, which is only about 3 per cent of the nation's wealth, while an additional 1,000,000,000 francs ($50,000,000) would be produced annually because reduction of the floating debt would cut down interest and carrying charges.

Hundreds of Americans and Englishmen who have established official residence in France in order to escape heavy income tax at home will be compelled to contribute a tithe of their wealth unless they are able to transfer their holdings before the measure becomes operative—if it ever does. The safes of the great gambling casinos on the Riviera and at Deauville also will be tapped. Primarily the plan is designed to uphold the exchange value of the franc. For the present this is being kept steady by the purchase of francs by the French government with Morgan loan funds. The re-establishing of the gold franc is the ultimate aim of the government.

FIELD MARSHAL VON HINDENBURG has accepted the nomination of the German Nationalists for the presidency, in opposition to Wilhelm Marx, nominee of the Republican coalition and leader of the Catholic Centrist party. Twice the old soldier declined the honor, partly because of his age and partly because he wanted Dr. Karl Jarres to run. But the Nationalists compelled Jarres to withdraw from the campaign and obtained the indorsement of the Hanoverian party, the Bavarian People's party and the Economic party for the candidacy of the field marshal. The German People's party, led by Doctor Stresemann, for some days threatened to break away from the Nationalist coalition if Von Hindenburg were nominated, but it, too, finally yielded, issuing this statement:

"Despite our apprehensions of international and national difficulties which may result from the nomination of Gen. von Hindenburg, we will stand with him in the fight for his election for the sake of the bourgeois parties. We will keep up the discipline of the party."

Von Hindenburg still declares himself the "devoted servant" of former Kaiser William, and German Republicans wonder how, if he is that and if he is elected, he can swear an oath of allegiance to the republic. His most prominent supporters assert openly that they, as well as the field marshal, believe the idea of a monarchy is only slumbering in Germany and that the nation is awaiting the day when a monarch shall preside over its destinies. "For us all" they say, "the son of the crown prince will be the legal heir to the throne when he reaches his majority." This will be in 1927, so that is the date when the Nationalists expect the restoration. The way to it has been made clearer by the virtual renunciation by Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria of his claims to the imperial throne. He says north Germany does not want a Catholic sovereign, and that his health is broken.

And then, on the other hand, all of these plans, hopes and discussions may be futile, for Marx may be elected president and the German republic may be continued indefinitely.

It is announced that Germany's payments to creditor nations under the Dawes plan during March amounted to 91,691,000 marks ($22,923,500). Of this France received 37,900,000 marks and Great Britain 21,600,000. Total payments for the seven months the Dawes plan has been in operation have been $145,000,000.

"GIVE her a good swipe now," said Secretary of the Navy Wilbur to Mrs. Wilbur Tuesday at Camden, N. J., and the lady promptly smashed a bottle of mineral water on the bows of the largest airplane carrier in the world. The U. S. S. Saratoga thereupon slid down the ways while whistles shrieked and aircraft swooped aloft. The Saratoga is the biggest ship ever built in the United States and when completed will have cost $45,000,000. She will be the mother ship of 72 planes, 31 of which will be bombers. In addition she will carry great stores of parts and explosives and will have elaborate repair shops. Her huge electric motors will give her a speed of 30 knots, enabling her to forge far ahead of a battleship fleet. The turbine generators will supply 45,000 horse-power to each of the four screws.

Admittedly something of an experiment, the Saratoga is looked on with scorn by Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, about to be retired from the post of assistant chief of the army air service. Said he:

"I could sink the Saratoga with a pursuit plane; I wouldn't even need a bomber. As a part of the national defense it is not worth considering. By this fall the building of aircraft carriers of that kind will be stopped. It is useless to build a carrier for airplanes that can be sunk so easily.

"The same thing goes for all battleships. Look at the great fleet now at anchor on the Pacific coast, waiting to participate in the Hawaiian exercises. They could be sunk to a ship within a few hours by a single squadron of bombers. Holding maneuvers with battleships made obsolete by the airplane is Civil war stuff. It's ridiculous."

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, a notable advocate of considerable silence, lets it be known that he would like a little more of that concerning several things. One of these is the matter of the French debt. He is fully cognizant of France's financial troubles and there will be no attempt to force her to discuss the war debt problem until she is in better position. Concerning the plans of the United States for calling another limitation of arms parley, also, there is too much talk, the President thinks, in view of the fact that nothing definite is planned for the immediate future.

Government officials say that the many recent stories of the President's extreme economy in the matter of his clothing purchases are not received kindly at the White House, and that most of them are false or misleading. Merchants in Washington had begun to fear that the example attributed to Mr. Coolidge would be followed by the society folk there and that the re-soling of shoes and the blocking of old hats would become "the thing."

TURKEY is having a hard time suppressing the revolt of the Kurds, who are determined to revive the caliphate and are all in arms. Sheik Said, their leader, is said to have at least 30,000 fanatical followers and is holding a number of important towns. The government has offered a reward for his capture alive or dead and has sent some 70,000 troops into Kurdistan. Complete mobilization has been ordered, Premier Ismet Pasha admitting that the revolt is much graver than newspaper reports have indicated.

EMULATING the examples set by Mrs. Mae Nolan and Mrs. Julius Kahn, both of San Francisco, Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers of Lowell, Mass., has announced her candidacy for the seat in congress left vacant by the death of her husband, John Jacob Rogers. She would continue the policies established by Mr. Rogers.

NAVY airplanes manned by volunteer navy flyers will be a part of the Donald MacMillan Arctic exploration expedition that is to start for the polar regions this summer, and the expedition, though a private enterprise, has the indorsement of President Coolidge. The explorers will have the use of two planes of the amphibian type with a cruising radius of more than a thousand miles and a speed of 120 miles an hour.

One of the chief objects of the expedition aside from scientific discovery, radio research and search for historical data concerning the original landing of the Norsemen, will be the hunt for the unknown Arctic continent, an illusive domain which has been reported several times by explorers, but never set foot on by man.

MacMillan's ships plan to leave Maine about June 15, and proceed northward, skirting the Labrador coast, then across Davis strait to the Greenland shore. In Labrador and Greenland the ancient Norse ruins will be explored to connect them, if possible, with Eric the Red. As soon as the exploring ship has pushed its way northward through Baffin sea and across Mellville bay to Etah in the far north, an attempt will be made to reach Axel Heiburg land. Safely anchored there, it is planned to establish the airplane base some 250 miles away from the ship at the northern point of the land. Working from this advance base, the planes will strike first in the direction of Crockerland, the problematical continent of the Arctic.

SPEAKING of the Arctic, Dr. Frederick A. Cook, who said and still says he discovered the North pole before Peary, left his home in Fort Worth, Texas, last week for a sojourn of 14 years in the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth. He was sentenced for fraudulent use of the mails and already had spent 16 months in jail. Petitions to the President asking pardon for Cook are in circulation and many signatures have been obtained.

POLITELY but firmly, President Coolidge refuses to reconsider his award in the Tacna-Arica dispute between Peru and Chile or to comply with the conditions asked by Peru, which included the dispatch of United States forces to displace Chileans in control of the disputed territory until after the plebiscite is held. In his reply to the Peruvians the President assures them that their interests are fully safeguarded and that the powers of the plebiscitory commission headed by General Pershing are ample.

AMONG the well known persons taken by death during the week were Mahomet Ali, former shah of Persia; Albert Dickinson, head of a big grain and seed business in Chicago; Archbishop Alexander Christie of the Roman Catholic archdiocese of Oregon City, Ore.; G. S. Fernald, general counsel of the Pullman company, and Most Rev. Dr. Tikhon, former patriarch of all Russia, whose struggle against the soviet government attracted so much attention in recent years.

PLANS are being perfected for a non-political Pan-Pacific conference in Honolulu from July 1 to 15. Seven countries will be represented by prominent men and it is hoped the gathering will take on much of the character and importance of the Institute of Politics at Williamstown, Mass., and will become a permanent forum of all peoples of the Pacific.

THE American Cotton Manufacturers' association held its annual convention Friday and Saturday in New Orleans with all the leading cotton organizations of the country represented. Edwin T. Meredith, former secretary of agriculture, was the principal speaker on the opening day.

Plan Special Survey of Aleutian Islands

Washington.—A scientific expedition to the little-known chain of Aleutian islands, off the coast of Alaska, is the task this summer of a special field party of the coast and geodetic survey, to be aided by the coast guard.

Equipped with modern apparatus, the party will be picked up by the coast guard, which will land it on one island of the group, resume its patrol work and later pick up the party and take it to another of the Aleutians.

The program of the party, which is to leave Seattle aboard the coast guard cutter Haida some time in April, is to make a preliminary survey to collect data useful in a more thorough survey; to obtain magnetic observations, including determination of possible local magnetic disturbance due to the character of the rocks; to determine accurate positions by astronomical observations; to operate an automatic tide gauge, whenever conditions warrant, and to make topographic surveys of the harbors and collect coast pilot information.

The new radio method will be used in getting hitherto doubtful longitudes, by making observations on stars and receiving radio signals, and calculating the difference in time between the transmitting station and place of observation.

The party will consist of Lieut. G. C. Jones, Ensign J. C. Bose and two men, all specially selected.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Monroe—The city council has authorized the expenditure of the necessary funds with which to beautify the Soldiers and Sailors' Park and the Water Works Park here. Shrubbery is to be planted. The parks are located along the River Raisin.

Petoskey—Sheriff George Carpenter was injured when he was attacked by Bernard Klise, a prisoner. The attack came as the sheriff was passing a table where Klise was sitting. The man jumped and struck the officer on the head with a chair leg.

Grand Rapids—An appeal to the Kent Welfare council to help check the sale of babies in Kent county if this condition is found to exist, was made by City Commissioner George H. Gruenbauer, a member of the board of control of the juvenile home.

Escanaba—Victor Olson, a sexton, was attacked and severly bitten on the right hand by a mad dog while he was digging a grave in Stannes cemetery. The animal was shot by the police. Several cases of rabies have been found here and a "shoot unmuzzled dogs on sight" order has been issued.

Mt. Clemens—Incorporation as a city of that community in and near the village of Center Line has been asked of the Macomb County Board of Supervisors by nearly 6,000 residents. If a special election is authorized and the proposal approved the city is to be known as Garland, according to present plans.

Marquette—Red Cross workers and municipal officials from surrounding towns endeavored to secure shelter, food and clothing for the people of Chatham, made homeless by fire. The fire was started by two girls who were playing with matches. The Alger county infirmary, the public school, railroad station and all except one dwelling were destroyed.

Owosso—Waiving examination on a charge of forgery, Frank E. Sutfin, former Owosso business man and a candidate for mayor two years ago, has been bound over to Circuit Court and will, he says, plead guilty. He furnished bail in the sum of $3,000. The charge grows out of Sutfin's alleged attempt to conceal assets of $8,000 in a recent property settlement with his divorced wife.

Detroit—Opening of a second interurban passenger terminal was announced by the Detroit United Lines. The station which is on Fort street in River Rouge, is to be called the Oakwood station and placed in operation. All cars and trains operating on the Detroit, Monroe & Toledo short line will be met at this station by motor coaches and brought through the congested parts of the city.

Detroit—Police reserves, routing a mob of 5,000 persons, saved Adline Mathis, Negro, his family and boarders at 5915 Northfield avenue, from a threatened violence after a crowd had advanced in close formation and bombarded his house with rocks and other missiles. A strong police picket thrown about the house, still was on duty early today to guard against another outbreak. Mathis told police move from the district.

Lansing—Three million dollars worth of highway refunding bonds was sold to a syndicate headed by Keene, Taylor and Company, by the State Administrative Board. The syndicate paid a premium of $270 for $2,410,000 of four per cent bonds and $590,000 worth of 4 1-2 per cent bonds. The average interest cost to the state will be 4.046. The proceeds will be used to retire an issue of short term five per cent bonds.

Ypsilanti—As a result of the action of the voters here in rejecting a proposed charter amendment, which would have raised the limit for the issuance of paving bonds from two per cent to four per cent of the assessed valuation, the same amendment which was defeated last fall the council has refused even to allow a reading of bids offered by contractors for paving certain streets here. The ultimatum was issued that since the voters refused to allow the council a free hand, the latter will permit no paving whatever during the coming year.

Lansing—Officials of the Ann Arbor Railroad completed arrangements with the State Tax Commission whereby they will issue $1,500,000 worth of bonds against the physical property of the road and from it pay the state $600,000 for back taxes. The delinquent taxes cover a four-year period. Demand for payment has been made from time to time and was insisted on a year ago. On that occasion, Mr. Lord says, officials of the road protested that the Ann Arbor would be forced into the hands of a receiver if the state set about to collect the taxes.

Sandusky—Farmers and shippers living along the Detroit, Bay City Western Railroad route must raise $50,000 with which to purchase first mortgage bonds from the present owners if they wish to receive transportation service. The new owners, who purchased the road recently for $200,000 at a receiver's sale in Bay City, state that the section of the road in the vicinity of Sandusky can not be operated without the $50,000 additional capital. If the money is not forthcoming, it is stated, this part of the railroad will be scrapped.

Saginaw—A driverless automobile, careening through the business district, was a pyre of death for three little girls. The girls were fatally burned after the car caught fire and ran without a driver for two blocks after the pilot, Lawrence Boyd, in attempting to save the children, had fallen from the automobile. Two of the girls were Boyd's daughters, aged four and five years, who were riding in the rear seat with another little girl. Boyd says that in attempting to climb over the back seat to lift them out he fell from the machine.

Birth Control Is Advocated

The ‘‘birth Control" fanatics are at it again and have come right out in the open before everybody and declared for less births and more social liberties, at least that's what we take it they are driving at. ‘‘Way Down East" in Massachusetts they have found some booby doctor who rises to remark:

‘‘Birth control is harmless, religious, human and it should be legal", he declared. ‘‘If civilization is to continue to be worth while in that it signifies increasing health, happiness, high ideals, altruism and progress, there must be less mental conflict, which is the harbinger of neurosis.

‘‘The greatest source of all neurosis is admittedly the conflict between the fundamental, instinctive desire for mating, with reproduction as a consequence and the taboos and conventions which have been built up against it."

He declared that many divorces and wrecked homes can be attributed to lack of reliable information on the part of married couples

This medical man may be right but if he were in North Adams he'd find a lot of opposition to his pet theory without looking into the Bible. From a casual perusal of his argument it would appear he was trying to establish a loose social condition under which no class of people can live and thrive.

The Sultana Disaster

Last week we mentioned the death of William Crisp of Osceola, Nebraska, and promised more concerning his eventful life this issue. We should have mentioned last week that besides Mrs. Mary Gray he also has one other niece here in the person of Mrs, Will Peterson. What we are mostly concerned about now is the great disaster which took place on the Mississippi river 7 miles above Memphis Tennessee when a large steamer laden with liberated prisoners from Confederate pens was homeward bound. This affair has been pretty well described in our columns some time ago but we doubt if many remember the details. The sinking occurred on April 27, 1865 and it was claimed at the time 1500 soldiers died. However since that time actual records have shown the number to be considerably less but the circumstances was a sad blow to many a yearning relative in the north.

A number of Michigan boys were in the disaster and among them was a brother of Hiram Cole formerly of Pittsford but now deceased. Mr. Cole gave a graphic description of the accident. He said he was sleeping on the deck when the boiler of the Sultana let go with a terrific roar. Large numbers of men were instantly killed and a good many scalded, and Mr. Cole had most of his clothing shredded by the blast. Looking up forward where the fire was fast eating at the cabin wood work he could see the terrified men jumping in masses into the river, and as they clung together they looked for all the world like a clump of bees struggling in the water and rolled over and over in a drowning mass. He decided at once that was no place for him and crawled rearward until he arrived under the protection of one of the big paddle wheel boxes. Here he disrobed, grabbed a plank and plunged into the icy waters of the Mississippi which was swollen by floods until it was fully three miles wide. The horror of that night remained with him until his dying day and the screams of the wounded and drowning soldiers created a pandemonium hard to realize. Mr. Cole swam about for many hours and was finally picked up by a boat from the shore. Mr. Crisp was also sleeping on deck only three feet from the engines of the boat and was frightfully burned, had a broken shoulder and three broken ribs. In this condition he was obliged to jump overboard and swam three miles, coming to a tree where he lifted himself out of the water and hung on until nine o'clock the next day when he was rescued by a southerner with an old ‘‘dugout" boat. This same man took out 65 dead and alive from the wreck. He was a Confederate soldier. Mr. Crisp was taken to Memphis to a hospital and it was six weeks before he was able to navigate. In the mean time relatives in the North had not received any intelligence from him and supposed him dead. By slow stages he finally got back to Michigan being obliged to stop enroute at hospitals to receive treatment. Arriving in Hillsdale he was a raw sight, all bandaged and blackened from his burns and elicited considerable excitement. For a year afterward he was ill and unable to work. When he did recover he went into the ministry, moved to Nebraska and there led a very useful life until death. To the end he carried frightful scars from the burns received when the Sultana's boiler blew up. It is probable that now there are not one dozen living who went through this terrible experience, and they are widely scattered. It is miraculous that anyone lived to tell the story as most of the men had been in a southern prison starving and dying of many diseases and no doubt were very weak and ill conditioned for such exposure.

Correspondence Schools Are Scored

We have always contended that a correspondence school for learning the young ideas how to shoot was not practical and far from square toed. Way back some years ago we remember how such an institution wheedled us out of twenty two hard earned dollars for which we received practically nothing. There is no use talking when a young man starts out intending to get immensely rich from what he can pick up from a correspondence school it means his Waterloo. Michigan as a state has probably the same opinion since the officials of the notorious Detroit Show Card writing school have been indicted for using the government mails to defraud. We remember of seeing this school's advertising in thousands of papers in the country and no doubt they have had plenty of time to garner in millions of money from the abundant crop of suckers. On Monday a Detroit Judge handed out to the proprietor of this school a sentence of one year in Leavenworth Penitentiary and $12,000 fine, to a general manager a fine of $8,000 and six months in the House of Correction. So we hope this will be a lesson to all aspirants to let these fly by night correspondence schools severely alone.

Mail order buying is largely discouraged by a class of real red blooded citizens in this country. In the first place the man who buys from the mail order house is usually a well off person financially and his money could be used to advantage right here. Our merchants have to pay high taxes for the upkeep of the village that your property and my property shall become valuable, and the small communities shall exist and do business. Otherwise the big cities would gobble up our entire industrial system and we would have to visit Hillsdale or Jackson each time we wished to have the transmission renewed, the valves ground in, or we wanted a pair of everalls, or a gallon of oil, or a check cashed. We don't want such conditions. We want a live prosperous village and our money will have to be kept at home if we maintain local business. At times it seems hard to meet the tax gatherer and you are a little provoked to learn you are taxed to provide a drain or a gravel highway to drive your automobile on—yet here's where you make your money, raise and educate your children and bury your dead. You certainly are interested in this community, and it is up to you to make it strong and prominent. You can't do it by sending your money to Sears and Ripsaw.

They Put it Out

This is the way the North Adams fire brigade went to the fire away back in the '80's according to a clipping from an old edition of the Hillsdale paper:

‘‘North Adams came near being treated to another extensive fire last week, the high school being honored this time. Fire started around the register in some manner and but for the promptness with which the fire engine was run out and run in again, a sad conflageration no doubt wonld have resulted. Capt. Hank Boniman and his speaking trumpet rushed wildly up the center of the street blowing hoarse blasts on each other, and scaring all teams and other truck out of the way of the engine and hose cart. The engine, by the way, stood bravely by the water-works while some men and boys carried the hose cart to the school house on a stretcher and tried to throw it in at the window but could not owing to the hose becoming tangled around a shade tree. Foreman Curtis passed the engine in the street without recognizing it, and arrived at the school house in time to receive a bucket of cold water dashed over him by some zealous patriot. Having got the engine aad hose cart where no one could injure them and broke up most of the furniture and chopped away the floor, the boys carried some water in buckets and put the fire out. Pandemonium reigned Tine Speer busted a gallus, and everyone was happy.

If there is anything in North Adams people are proud of, it is that pretty little fire engine. They are so mashed on it that they will set up a stove in its stall to keep it warm, and some one will sit up with the dear little thing nights. In the spring when the weather softens, the city daddies will let some one take it to squirt water on the house plants, as it must not take cold water into its system!

The Citizen's Military Training Camp will be held at Camp Custer Michigan from July 23rd to Augnst 21, 1925. All young men are eligible between the ages of 19 and 31 years. World war veterans who are interested in attending this camp should communicate with the commanding general 6th corps area 1819 West Pershing Road, Chicago, Illinois.

He's Gone To Editing

The other day we picked up a copy of the Michigan Business Farmer published at Mt. Clemens, and casually glanced over its columns before taking our Sunday siesta. An honest open physiog beamed out at us from its columns; we recognized the photo at once as a correct map of Lewis Meeks' face. Sure enough! Our old acquaintance bigger than life! Right at the top of the department it stated that Mr. Meeks was editor of ‘‘Broadscope Farm News and Views" We read down a ways and the further we read the better we liked it—all solid stuff a yard wide, and right off the reel by a man who has practiced what he preaches for a number of years right here in our midst

It pays to work scientifically whether you are a farmer or a banker. Farm news is not the only commodity Bro. Meeks deals in. It is a fact he is one of the prominent potato raisers of southern Michigan. He raises spuds that stand out alone. It was his tubers that won the state championship in certified seed stock, and now those boys down in Ohio who have never supposed they could raise potatoes fit to look at on their hard pan clay, are buying his certified seed and getting results. There is more than one way to make good. Mr. Meeks has chosen one of the higher callings in life. His experience is worth something to the farmers of Michigan—at least the ‘‘Business Farmer" thinks so.

It is mighty consoling to know that after many years of Rip Van Winkle rest, Hillsdale county has decided to wake up to scientific farming, and the Boys' and Girls' stock clubs are fast forging to the front—they made a record at the great International Live Stock Show in Chicago last December. After all, Michigan is bound to become not only a popular playground for America's summer resorters, but her beautiful border of temperature softening lakes makes her one of the best agricultural states of the Union. We are proud of our scientific farming. It is fitting that the first high school in the state to install an agricultural department, should be the center of scientific farming. Go to it, Lew!

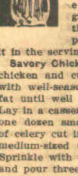
The discovery of a new dish does more for the happiness of mankind than the discovery of a new star.

Who wears her duty like a crown Is every inch a queen.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS



When you have a few of the large coarser outside stalks of celery, cut them into dice and cook in boiling salted water until tender. Meanwhile heat one cupful of thin cream to which a tablespoonful of butter has been added, season with salt and pepper, and one-eighth teaspoonful of grated nutmeg. Drain the cooked celery and pour the hot cream over it in the serving dish.

Savory Chicken.—Select a six-pound chicken and cut into pieces. Dredge with well-seasoned flour and saute in fat until well browned on both sides. Lay in a casserole and place around it one dozen small onions, three stalks of celery cut into inch pieces and two medium-sized carrots cut into slices. Sprinkle with one teaspoonful of salt, and pour three cupfuls of strained tomatoes over the top. Dot the top with one tablespoonful of butter, cover tightly and cook in a moderate oven until the vegetables are tender. Usually three hours will be needed for the cooking. Serve with boiled rice.

Vegetable Combination.—This dish will be sufficient for a main dish without meat. Place a cooked cauliflower in the center of a hot chop plate and surround it with mounds of the following cooked and seasoned vegetables: Small onions, diced carrots, diced beets, diced turnips and shredded string beans. Prepare a mock hollandaise as follows: Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour and blend well together. Add gradually one cupful of hot water, stir until well thickened. Season with one-half teaspoonful of salt, a little cayenne and a tablespoonful of lemon juice. Pour this sauce over two well-beaten eggs and pour at once over the cauliflower.

Take small canned beets, chop after draining and serve them heated in hot butter with a dash of vinegar and cayenne.

A nice way to bake apples is to fill the cavities with brown sugar and butter and pour a little water into the pan. Baste often with the water and butter while baking.

In Shabbytown

IN Shabbytown they do not care if things look seedy everywhere. They have no pep, they've lost their grip, they simply sit around and yip, in envy's tones, of Glossyville, the shining village on the hill. Oh, Shabbytown is punk and gray, and it shows symptoms of decay, and strangers passing through remark, "It surely dates back to the Ark." "Clean Up and Paint Up" makes men frown along the streets of Shabbytown. A can of paint makes no appeal to this bum village, down at heel; the people think there is no sense in going to so much expense; so things are always going down, and getting worse in Shabbytown. It always gives my soul a thrill when I arrive in Glossyville. The town looks like a blooming bride; the people take a hearty pride in making things look clean and bright, and in their labors take delight. They're lavish with the helpful paint, selecting colors chaste or quaint, and decorating every shack; thus warding off decay's attack, and making all the buildings look like buildings read of in a book. And strangers, when they see the town, say, "Here we'll come and settle down, and raise us nineteen kids apiece, and live and die as slick as grease." This happy burg goes right ahead, while Shabbytown is prone and dead.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

"The Juvenile Jazz To Jail"

Remember that the gang functions both at school and church, as well as at play and in the long evenings out, often making 10 hours a day that your boy is with the gang. And maybe you have him 10 hours a week!

The future of your boy is more and more in the hands of the gang and less and less in the hands of the church, the school or the home

And what is the big moulding influence on the gang? Unquestionably, commercial amusement, that is bidding for every possible moment of youth's time. The movie the pool room, and the dance hall are hot on his trail every minute of his available time. There you have it, the influence of the church slipping, the influence of the commercial amusement vulture as steadily gaining.

You would think that the home and church would get together for common defense, but such has not been the fact. The home surrenders supinely to the drift. The school, in her eagerness to assist, unintentionally robs the church of her chance to help,

MIDNIGHT STUFF

Take the high school "midnight stuff" that has swept this and other states, Parties, games, plays and contests are followed by a dance in the gym, getting out maybe at mid night. Then the auto rides home, by the longest route, often via a neighboring town, with crowded seats, inviting disaster on the road and moral let-downs to the midnight riders.

The school declares that the parents demand this new social life. Probably some do, but more make some feeble sort of a protest against the tide and many are fighting with their backs to the wall to keep their own homes safe. But any home struggling against a school has small chance in a world that is bound socially so close together.

One pastor tells of the father who offered his daughter a new piano if she would cut out this night stuff at school and get down to business. Another father offered to buy his boy and girl a new car if they would cut out the basket ball team with its three to six nights a week, and go at their books They refused the offer. Perhaps he has "raised" his bid since then.

WE RUN THE RISK

It would be disloyalty now to raise a question as to the profound wisdom of the intensive training of a handful of youngsters, and working them as hard as trained and mature athletes. Why call it recreation when this handful plays in a crowded gym where ventilation is often unknown? A few years from now, it may be displaced by something that is a blessing to the whole school. "Give 'em the Air," but do not give them too much night air, nor air that has been breathed sixteen times.

One rather angry father insists that some high schools need a night padlock put on by an awakened community. These words are not written by a grouch, but by one who believes that athletics form a vital part of youth's training. There is a program that will really re-create youth. We are for that!

BIG WITNESSES

We have talked with two of the wisest and best big men we know, who are facing this problem daily. One of our most conservative leaders assures us that the modern dance is far more dangerous than of old and that with the precocious sense of sex that is developing, it is working ruin among our youth.

Another frankly admits that he regards the modern high school as impossible and takes his own children out and sends them away to school. And the wise little preachers all agree with the big men. One optimist assures us that when the modern boys and girls get married, they will settle down and profit by their mistakes and we shall swing back to normalcy. But meanwhile, what of the wrecks that are strewn along the high school road, wrecks that can not be saved by any future generation's finding itself?

We are among those who count the present generation now in high school as one of the best that ever came from the hand of God. All the more shame if this company is marred by want of co-operation among their friends.

What can be done in a constructive way to remedy this situation?

1. Why couldn't the teachers and the preachers eat supper together, and when all hearts had been warmed by the coffee, talk the whole thing out? There must be a real get-together here, at last.

2. Church and school could agree to give and take on their nights, so it would be understood which nights "belonged," by a gentleman's agreement, to each organization. Only a few years ago, nights belonged to the home and the church. Just how we got to the place where we let the school claim "eight nights a week" is difficult to explain.

3. The school could insist on a reasonable closing hour, and enforce it. Why does the city of Detroit close its pavilions at the skating ponds at 9:45? They figure that the skaters will be back home at 10:30. The little towns do not get their midnight stuff from the organized recreation of Detroit.

4. The school can guard the interest of a minority that is hurt by the "advanced" program. There are still some conscientious objectors to the high school dance and the midnight stuff that goes with it. If the majority of the parents want the dance. then why not put it on in the afternoon of Saturday and let those come who wish to do so? Perhaps the parents would come also to supervise the dance. Why force it upon the minority? Why weave it into the athletic program which ought to stand on its own merit? If it must be held then why not clip its most objectionable features?

5. Couldn't we divorce the school from its endless money making devices for everything under the sun? The children are made to feel the bitter charge of disloyalty if they do not patronize everything going. What a pity it is that while the church is trying desperately to pull its feet out of the bottomless mire of money making stunts, the next generation is being headed away from possible freedom back into the slough of trying to ogle a dollar out of folks instead of manfully earning it and saving it for themselves.

6. The school and church can each afford to go out of its way to boost for each other. They hold the bridge for civilization, the home having so largely deserted the field. The pastorate of a church and the superintendency of a school system, or of a high school, represent two of the biggest and hardest and best tasks on the American continent today. If we do not hang together we will hang separately. Certainly we can not afford to hang each other, or even hinder each other.

If some Roman Catholic friend should smile over our predicament let him forget the smile. We are not compelled yet to choose between his parochial school and our present public school. There is still before us an ideal toward which we are striving, and we are on the way. We are conscious of the defects, and Protestantism is set to try to remedy them. We prefer our schools with all their faults and we like them so well that we want them to go on unto perfection.—The Christian Advocate.

Adapted Seed Makes Good on U. P. Farms

Adapted varieties of oats and barley have made good in the upper Peninsula of Michigan, in tests conducted during the past four years by specialists from the M. A. C. Results of these tests, showing what can be done under climatic conditions found in the northern part of the state, have been announced by C. E. Skiver, member of the crops department at the college.

Wolverine and worthy oats, and Wisconsin Pedigreed barley have proved to be especially adapted to the soils and climates of upper Michigan, says Skiver. This matter of adaptability, while very important anywhere, must be watched with especial care in northern sections like the upper peninsula.

On the 80,000 acres of oats produced annually in the Upper Peninsula, use of above named varieties would bring a sufficiently increased yield, under normal conditions, to mean an increased revenue of around $350,000 a year. The same ratio holds true for the adapted strain of barley, which would increase revenue around $50,000 on the U. P.'s annual crop of 8,000 acres. The Michigan Crop Improvement Associations, with offices at East Lansing, is a cooperative organization of growers who are producing certified seed stocks under the supervision of the extension service at M. A. C.

Moving Soils Lab. Makes Good Start

A movable soils laboratory, one of the most unnsual demonstration trains ever assembled in Michigan got under way in Jackson county on April 7 for a three weeks tour. Members of the soils department at M. A. C, and railroads over which the train will run are cooperating in putting on the "special".

A dozen counties in the southern part of the state are included in the itinerary for the moving laboratory. Soils are tested at each stop and demonstrations are given. Big crowds are reported to have met the train at each of its stops.

Stumps Cause Loss In Farm Operation

That farmers all over the state are annually suffering heavy loss because of the waste caused by "tramp" stumps in cultivated fields is the opinion of Larry Livingston Agricultural engineering specialist with the M. A. C. extension division. The lost crop area around these stumps is said to represent a bigger item of wasted efficiency than most farmers realize.

"The time has arrived," says Livingston, "when the farmer must improve his cultivated acres in order to produce maximum crop

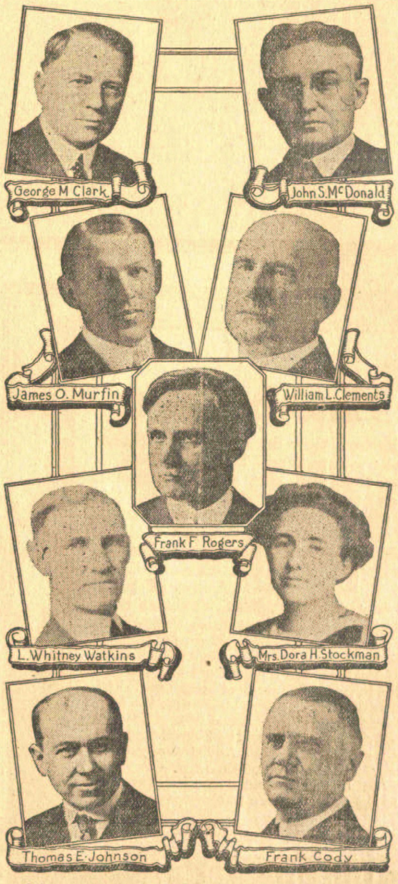
Republican Candidates on State Ticket, Election Monday, April 6



It is very apparent that Michigan Republicans believe that public servants at all times deserve to be rewarded for their faithful performance of duty, the entire state ticket at the April election being present incumbents of their respective positions. Supreme Court Justices John S. McDonald and George M. Clark are present members of that bench; then William L. Clements and James O. Murfin have each for a number of years been active on the Board of Regents having charge of the U. of M., while L. Whitney Watkins has served two terms and Mrs. Dora H. Stockman one on the State Board of Agriculture, the governing body of the M. A. C. Frank F. Rogers, State Highway Commissioner, has held that office more than a dozen years and was connected with the same department since its creation in the present form. Thomas E. Johnson has been connected with the school work of Michigan since 1890 and was appointed Superintendent of Public Instruction to fill vacancy by Governor Sleeper. Frank Cody, who is superintendent of the public schools in Detroit, has been a member of the State Board of Education for the past twelve years and is now the Republican party nominee for a third term.

"At first, when I came here, it was only at times that he'd take the morphine, and then he'd have terrible outbursts of rage, and his mind would go, especially when he'd have those fits after he came back from Avonmouth. But after that the hoodoo got him. That was when I was afraid."

"The hoodoo?" inquired Joan.

"Miss Wentworth, the devil who was at him so long got hold of him once or twice. I've seen him come back from Avonmouth a different man, Miss Wentworth. That's when I've been afraid. Because the devil that can kill the body isn't much of a devil, but when he kills the soul there is no help but prayer. When he's in those dreadful moods he's another man. He's a wicked man, Miss Wentworth, and I'd shoot him then, if he tried to harm me or any of mine, and I wouldn't think I'd killed Doctor Lancaster. It all began after they accused him of stealing the trust funds."

"It is not true," said Joan.

"I'm sure it isn't, Miss Wentworth. But you see old Doctor Lancaster didn't leave the charge of the fund to his son; he left it in the care of the trustees. And there were complications about the hospital at Avonmouth. And then, after the doctor's bride ran away on the eve of their marriage it changed all his nature."

"I have heard of that," said Joan quietly. "But we must not discuss that in the doctor's absence."

"Why, everybody knows about that, Miss Wentworth. Before it happened they say the doctor was the most respected man in Lancaster. He'd been born here, you know, on the plantation down in the valley Millville way. She was a Miss Reid. She came from Farnley county. She was the reigning belle there, admired and flattered, and it turned her heart to a stone to have all the men after her, crazy to marry her. The doctor was a young man then, and he couldn't see any further into her heart, such as it was, than the rest of them.

"She led the doctor a chase before she promised him, they say. But the very day before their marriage was to have been she left her home without a word to anyone, to go off with another man who's never been discovered. That broke the doctor up. He took to drugs then, they tell me. The institute had been a big place before; it stood over on Morley's hill, but it burned down one night, and we took this old farm house. And the doctor was using the funds, they said, and wasn't responsible at all.

"The trustees found that the money was gone. Nobody knew where it went, because the doctor had his own inheritance, and he wasn't the man to steal or squander. They wouldn't do anything to him, because of his family; but they put Mr. Myers in charge of the finances. That's all. None of us liked him, but what could we do about it? He was here when Doctor Jenkins and I were appointed, and as soon as we understood how matters were we agreed to stay as long as we could and try to help the doctor."

"Mrs. Fraser, I want to know why Mr. Myers incited Doctor Lancaster to use morphine," said Joan.

"Miss Wentworth—"

"You know he did. You told me so. And Doctor Jenkins knows."

The matron looked agitated. "What could we do?" she cried. "Suppose we knew, what can two people do against a man like Myers? Suppose we had said so, who would have believed us? We did all we could do; and we all love the doctor and would rather stay with him and help where we could than be discharged and do nothing."

"I know you did your best," answered the girl. "But why should Doctor Lancaster stay here in Myers' power, instead of at his home in Avonmouth, where he is respected and powerful? Nothing of all this is known there."

The matron wrung her hands. "I don't know," she answered. "I suppose that man has had him by the throat in more ways than we know. Whenever the doctor used to go to Avonmouth Mr. Myers would go with him, and generally he'd come back with him. Miss Wentworth, till you came here the doctor wasn't a man; what with his drugs and the hold Mr. Myers had over him, he was just a machine. And Mr. Myers was the driver."

Joan had the feeling that she should not listen to the matron's talk about Lancaster; it seemed disloyal of her; but she felt, too, that she must know more, and speedily, if she was to thwart that menacing evil which she sensed more and more clearly as the moments passed.

"Miss Wentworth," said the matron, placing her hand on the girl's arm firmly, "there's something else I ought to have told you about, Mrs. Dana—"

"Hark!" interrupted Joan, holding up her hand for silence.

Then they heard, a long distance away, and inaudible to one whose attention was not strained, like theirs, the sound of the wheels of Jenkins' buggy.

Chapter X

Joan hurried out upon the veranda and stood peering under her raised hand across the rain-swamped fields to where the carriage road wound in and out among the hills. The sun had set, and it was beginning to grow dusk; a bat was flitting under the eaves, and the steady downpour never ceased. Mrs. Fraser, who had moved to follow the girl, went back into her room. There was a queer, troubled pucker about her lips, and once she went to the door and looked intently at Joan, who had not stirred from her position of expectancy.

Presently, looking out through the dripping trees, Joan could see the buggy crawling up the hill through the mud. Slowly it moved along the road. Jenkins was driving, and there were two men with him, not one. Joan recognized Lancaster; then she perceived, first the hard hat, next Myers' face under it.

She shuddered. The worst had come about, then. But the last battle was joined, and under her fears she felt a hardening of her spiritual resources. She would not falter. She went slowly toward the top of the three low wooden steps, and stood there like a statue, watching the buggy pass up the weed-grown drive until it came to a standstill.

Lancaster and Myers were laughing together, and, as Myers saw the girl, he said something, and the other threw back his head in merriment.

Myers was the first to descend. He raised his hat to Joan and grinned. "The doctor's come back quite safe, you see," he said, "and feeling fine again."

Joan hardly noticed the man; she was bracing herself to bear what was to come.

Lancaster got out, and Jenkins, contrary to his custom, lashed the horse violently and drove rapidly away. Myers and Lancaster came up the steps of the porch together. Now Lancaster was raising his hat in turn, and under it was the face of the smirking bully of the operating theater at the Avonmouth hospital.

"Well, I had a fine trip to Avonmouth, my dear, and I hurried back as fast as I could, to see you. I couldn't stay away from you very long, Joan, after you saved my life. And I persuaded Mr. Myers to return with me. We're all going to be good friends. Mrs. Fraser! Mrs. Fraser! Where the devil are you?" he bawled.

Mrs. Fraser's frightened face appeared at the door. "Here, sir!" she stammered.

"Is supper ready? If so, we'll all eat together."

"It's waiting, sir. I'll lay another place," said the matron.

"Good! Then we'll go in. What do you say, Joan, darling? Aren't you glad to see me?" he asked, linking his arm in the girl's and advancing his face within a few inches of hers.

With a sob Joan tore herself away from him and ran upstairs at the top of her speed. She was choking with grief and shame. Hard as she ran, she knew her flight was an incentive to Lancaster to follow her. He went after her as fast as he could, and, as she slammed the door of her room, his hand was on the knob outside. She was just too late to turn the key.

"Joan! Joan! Open the door and don't act like a little fool!" he shouted. "What's the matter with you? Ain't you glad I've come back? Say, I've got a half dozen bottles of the fizzy stuff in my bag, and we three will make a night of it."

"Oh, won't you please leave me?" pleaded Joan. "Try to remember how—how different you were yesterday."

"That's true!" he swore. "I'm different now. I was a sanctimonious mug yesterday. I'm in my right mind today. It gave me the blue creeps, being cooped up here in this God-forsaken place. I tell you, Joan, now that I've had enough good liquor to soak that morphine out of my system I'm feeling like a king. Say, now, come down to supper, like a good little girl, and we'll have a great time together. Myers doesn't bear any ill-feeling. And we'll put him out after a while and finish up the bottles ourselves. And say—"

He was advancing toward her with his arms outstretched. Joan sprang back to the washstand and snatched up the half-filled pitcher, with such an evident determination to defend herself with it that the man fell back scowling.

"Joan, don't be a little jackass!" he shouted angrily. "I know what you mean when you look at me like that. You think you're above being jolly and sociable, just because I don't choose to stand on my dignity tonight. Did you expect me to go about always looking like a sanctified mummy, as I did when I was ill?"

"Listen, Doctor Lancaster," panted the girl. "I am not going to judge you by what you are saying now. Leave me, and tomorrow, if you are yourself, I shall be willing to hear your explanation, because I know it is not your better self that is speaking. Leave my room now, please, immediately!"

The man glared at her; but he was dominated, in spite of himself, by her courage and apparent calmness.

"Well, I'm not going to fight with you before I've had my supper," he answered. "You think things over, and in a little while I guess you'll see them in a different light. You can't fool me with these mock airs and graces, dearie. I've seen them in women before. Used to believe in them once, too, till I found it meant that it was going to cost me more in the end. You come down and act straight, Joan—see?"

He slammed the door viciously behind him. Joan fell upon her knees beside her bed. There, tearless, but shaken with her grief, she poured out a wild prayer for the lost soul of the man. This was worse than anything she could have divined. Better by far that he had returned as on that earlier day, drugged and possessed by the morphine spirit than in the chains of this devil. Better that he had died. For Lancaster, even when the shifty, false, lying drug fiend was in control of him, had never been vicious and vile like this before.

And yet this was the John Lancaster of the Southern hospital. It was the traditional Lancaster in his hour of relaxation. He treated women shamefully, as a gossiping nurse had said. Joan had never been in fear of physical harm as she was now. She rose from her knees, looking wildly about her. Then she heard footsteps outside, and she sprang back across the room.

But it was only the matron. Mrs. Fraser cast a scared glance at her and ran forward. "What did he say to you?" she cried.

"I am afraid of him. I dare not stay here. Where shall I go?" cried Joan, losing all self-control.

In the midst of her terror Joan suddenly realized that the look upon the matron's face was the same as on her first night, when they had held a brief conversation in the same room.

For a moment Mrs. Fraser did not answer her. The women drew together, listening. They were having supper below, conversing in boisterous tones and laughing loudly. Joan heard her own name spoken, and a renewed outburst of mirth followed.

"Mrs. Fraser," said Joan, "the Doctor Lancaster whom I respect and honor is not in that man's body. I am going away. I am going at once. I shall ask Doctor Jenkins to protect me until tomorrow. He is a gentleman; he will do so."

"You can't go through this storm," exclaimed the other, and, as she spoke, Joan realized that the wind had risen to a hurricane, and the boughs creaked and snapped like pistol shots. "You must stay here tonight. Stay with me, and I'll swear he shall not hurt you. Look at this!"

She pulled a revolver from beneath her apron and handed it to Joan.

"I've kept that ever since the last time he came back like this, when he went raving among the patients, mad with liquor. That was the end of the institution. He frightened a sick girl almost to death. Use it on him if you must—use it, because it won't be him you'll kill, but the devil that's got him."

She was almost incoherent with fear and excitement. Joan took the revolver and slipped it into the pocket of her uniform. Oddly enough, she felt that the Lancaster of that evening had so grossly wronged the Lancaster of earlier days that to kill him would be to avenge an intolerable outrage. She hated him with all the intensity of which her heart was capable, hated him for the wrong he had done himself, the outrage on their love; and under the hate the flame of the love she had borne burned pure and clear.

It was long since dark, but the maid had not lit the lamp outside Mrs. Dana's door, near the head of the stairs. The moon had not yet risen. The women crept cautiously along the hall.

Lancaster and the secretary were in Myers' room. The door was open. Joan heard a cork fly with a bang, and the gurgle of the champagne in glasses. Their voices were raised high, and there came the sound of a scuffle.

"Sit down!" the secretary was crying. "Do you want to be a fool and spoil everything? Leave her alone until tomorrow."

"I'm d—d if I do!" cried Lancaster. "Wait a minute! Listen to me! You agreed to come back here and put her out. Why don't you do it now?"

Lancaster laughed coarsely. "Because she's too d—n pretty, Myers," he answered.

Boy Was Right There After Job He Wanted

He was a clean-cut, wide-awake young chap and he wanted a job. "I have nothing at present," said the corporation manager, "but leave your name and if anything turns up you will be notified."

"May I ask if you have made the same promise to many others," said the applicant.

"Yes, quite a few," was the reply. The boy grinned and remarking that it was no monopoly he went out.

A few days later a young man was needed in a hurry and seven telegrams were dispatched to seven waiting applicants. Hardly had these left the secretary's office when in walked Johnny on the Spot, holding his telegram.

"How in the world did you get it?" gasped the executive.

"Well, sir," he answered, "the other day as I was going out I stopped and got a job as errand boy. I thought it would be a good plan to be where I could get the news quicker than the others."

"You'll do!" said the manager.—Boston Transcript.

Major's Man Knew How to Deal With Scorpion

The major acquired a body servant named Garvino while we were soaking up malaria in the hills back of Santiago. One day the major was stung by a large scorpion—stung through his leather legging at that. Major Latimer was probably one of the world's greatest technicians in the art of profanity. He tore loose with his entire vocabulary when the virus of the scorpion made itself felt. Then he concluded he was going to die, as many other scorpion stingees had.

Garvino dug around till he found another scorpion. He broke the critter in two, tore off the major's legging, rolled up his pants and drawers and applied the raw end of half the broken scorpion to the spot on the major's leg where the sting had entered, writes Leo P. Cook in Adventure Magazine. The pain ceased immediately and the major felt no further discomfort. Thereafter we knew how to treat a scorpion sting. This may be old stuff.

Another little trick of Garvino was to catch a scorpion, hold it by the head from beneath with thumb and finger, and with his other hand tear out the muscle that actuated the scorpion's sting. You know the scorpion must flip his tail up over his head to strike. After Garvino had performed this operation the scorpion was helpless to sting, though his locomotion was not interfered with.

Children sometimes remove the white petals from daisies and then use the yellow center as pumpkin pies for their dolls' tables. By clipping off the rays to shape a cap and leaving two long ones for strings, with a little ink, a capped grandmother's head and face are made. In literature the daisy has a place second only to the rose.

Accepts "Off Days" as Part of Life's Game

Writing on happiness, in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan, Bruce Barton makes three suggestions to insure happiness. He also tells what he does when he is physically and mentally below par.

"There are a certain number of days in every month when I am not worth a hoorah," he says. "Once I fretted through these days and tried to drive myself to work, but no more. When such a day dawns now, when I wake up utterly lacking in pep, I accept the verdict blithely.

"Sometimes I take books and cigars and go back to bed. Some days I walk around in unfamiliar parts of town; some days I play golf or ride. And at evening I am refreshed and I say, 'One more day to charge up to the reserve for wasted days.' And invariably the next day I feel fine."

High School Notes

There will be a basket ball game here Friday night with Waldron.

We would like to see a larger crowd out at the picture shows on Saturday nights.

There have been a number of pupils out of school with the grippe and colds for the past two weeks.

The 7th and 8th grades entertained the 7th and 8th grades from the country last Saturday. About 70 7th and 8th graders from the surrounding schools responded to Mr. Young's invitation to spend the day at the school house in preparation for the coming examinations. After a forenoon's work in Geography History, Arithmetic, Physiology and Hygiene a pot.luck dinner was enjoyed. In the afternoon there was a spelling contest and some outdoor sports. Charley is the boy who was appointed by Warren Harding to boss the Veteran's Bureau and according to investigations, Charley proved so inefficient that 450 millions of government money or rather the people's money was grafted or wasted. As a sample of the corruption practiced one may call attention to the fact that Forbes sold 98,000 pairs of pajamas for thirty cents a pair and these pajamas were made by hand by American women for the benefit of the soldiers who were deprived of home comforts. Forbes had a bad record before his appointment but then it seems that men of his type are the ones who receive the best positions in politics yet it is one consolation to remember that LaFollette is on hand in Washington to prevent the crooks from carrying away the mint.

The entertainment at the church last Thursday evening was well attended about $50 being realized including expenses of eight dollars The program lasted about two hours. When the pioneers came to Michigan they built a schoolhouse and a church in every neighborhood, and afterwards a little plot of ground was set aside in which to lay away their reverenced dead. Today the churches are falling into decay, the schools are being deserted, while weeds and brambles flourish where the forefathers of the hamlet sleep. What a fine thing it would be if the grandsons and granddaughters would return from the city to the country lanes and renew once more the old pioneer spirit of this state.

A. J. Hoffman and wife returned on Wednesday from Lexington, Kentucky, where Mr. Hoffman went to investigate a road contract. They drove the Hudson Coach and in 10½ hours covered 336 miles over all kinds of roads. They report some primitive roads in the state of Kentucky among the foot hills, but in the famous blue grass region found the finest farming country they had ever seen. When in the wildest part of the journey they had the misfortune to hit a sharp stone in such a way as to puncture the gas tank, and most of the gas ran out. Coming to a small station in this rugged region they could get gas but had no way of repairing the leak. Finally they happened to think of chewing gum and thus the leak was stopped for the time being. They were away three days and covered 1200 miles.

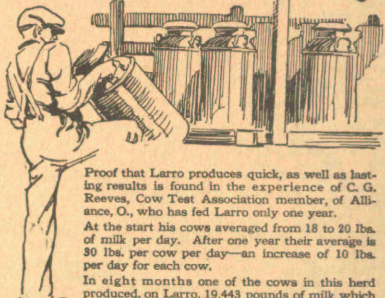
10 lbs. more! per cow – per day!



Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

Years of Satisfactory Service

A RUBEROID roof is like a good insurance policy—when you get one you have the comfortable feeling that the future is well taken care of. A Ruberoid roof is an insurance against roofing troubles for years to come. Many laid in 1892—when Ruberoid was first made—are still in service and have cost practically nothing for upkeep.

Ruberoid Roll-roofing has a record of durability which cannot be paralleled in the industry. With the mineralized surface (of natural crushed slate) it is particularly attractive for use on barns, silos, sheds and similar buildings.

Ruberoid Strip-shingles are ideal for residences where there is a possibility of great variety in color treatment. Due to their unusual form, you may lay them in any one of many distinctive patterns. Furthermore, it is not necessary to use a single color in any of these patterns. You may obtain an attractive blend of colors, since the shingles are made with surfacings of natural crushed slate in sage green, Venetian red, and steel-blue.

Come in or phone us to-day for samples and descriptive folders which will give you some very important information about Ruberoid Shingles and Roofing.

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Reapportionment Measure Wins Approval of Senate By Big Majority

Lansing—The Howarth Bill, reapportioning the House of Representatives so as to give Wayne County 21 members, was passed by the Senate, 26 to 5.

Senator Horton's county, Lenawee, would lose one of its two representatives under the new bill. Mecosta County forms part of Senator Case's district. It now has a representative of its own. Under the Howarth Bill, it would have to share its representative with Lake County.

The bill, after its passage by the Senate, was received in the House without comment. It was referred by Speaker Fred B. Wells to the Committee on Apportionment. No attempt was made to raise the expected point of order on the right of the House to consider the bill.

The next obstacle the bill must clear is the opposition majority in committee. That majority, since the session began, has had a margin of only one vote.

No Clemency For Drunk Drivers

The Drunk Motorist bill which passed the Senate some weeks ago was bolstered up by a House amendment and then passed, 96 to 0. As it now reads the drunken driver will automatically lose his operator's license at the moment of conviction and will be unable to drive again until he has been either a passenger or a pedestrian for 90 days.

The members of the House Judiciary Committee stood out for a 30-day suspension period on the grounds that many a drunken driver who now pleads guilty in hope of being placed on probation and sent out to drink and drive again, will plead not guilty and call loudly for jury trials and such. The house made it 90 days, regardless.

Rep. John Holland, of Bessemer, announced that he was not greatly impressed by the measure. He could see no logic, he said, in recognizing the fact that a man might drive while drunk as long as the existing law prohibits the process of getting drunk.

Condemnation Bill Shunted

The Atwood highway condemnation bill, the last item on the governor's program of highway legislation, was torn off the house calendar and dumped back into the judiciary committee. It is expected to die there. Several representatives attacked it on the grounds that it was too radical in its proposed departure from established condemnation practices. The belief that the bill will not emerge from the committee is based upon the fact that the offensive against it was led by wo members of that committee.

Big Deficit Looms

This year's legislature does not propose to be common-place. Not as the "do nothing legislature," the self-conjured appellation of the last body, will it be known, but as the prodigal among Michigan legislatures it promises to go down in history. It has proceeded with a spending program that has no precedent. If all of the appropriation measures pending are passed, Michigan will be spending through its various agencies upward of $50,000,000 in each of the next two years.

Senate For Sanitorium

The Administration Tuberculosis Sanitorium Bill was passed by the Senate by a vote of 23 to 6. The bill provides for an appropriation of $500,000 to be spent in two years in acquiring a site and building a new sanitorium to replace the state institution now at Howell. The bill was introduced by Senator Burney E. Brower, of Jackson, Administration spokesman. It has gone to the House.

Court Reform Starts

The Senate passed the Darin Justice Court Bill, providing for the taking of appeals from Justice Court to Circuit Court on transcript of testimony. The bill, introduced by Rep. Frank P. Darin, former River Rouge justice of the peace, has already passed the House and has gone to the Governor for signature.

Felony To Carry Pistols

The senate passed the Condon firearms bill which makes it a felony to carry pistols, blackjack and major weapons used by thugs. Carrying of lesser weapons is a misdemeanor under the bill.

Gambling Bill Passed

The Bahorski Anti-Gambling Bill has been passed unanimously by both the House and Senate and will become the law of Michigan as soon as it is signed by the Governor.

Watson Sworn In

The Senate attained its full membership of 32 for the first time since the session opened when Senator Joseph E. Watson, representing the ninth district, was sworn in. The ninth district consists of Calhoun and Branch Counties. Mr. Watson was elected two weeks ago to fill out the unexpired term of Senator James Henry, of Battle Creek, who died after the session opened. Mr. Henry was never well enough to assume his seat.

M. A. C. Changes Name

The Horton Bill, to change the name of Michigan Agricultural College to Michigan State College of Agriculture and Applied Science, which already has been passed by the Senate, was passed by the House. Although the bill had been the subject of much informal discussion among House members, there was no debate before it came to vote. There was a burst of hand-clapping from the floor, however, when the result was announced. The bill awaite dthe Governor's signature.

Smith, arrested on a non-support charge, made the foregoing admission to the officers.

Pontiac—Pontiac's school budget for the coming year will be above $1,000,000. As the board of education is not empowered to raise more than $716,000 and the revenues are about $205,000, it has been found necessary to put before the voters of the district an additional appropriation by direct tax of $116,000.

Mason—Sunday dancing will be prohibited at resorts in four counties this summer, Sheriff Hough Silby has declared here. Dancing pavilions in Eaton, Ingham, Shiawassee and Clinton counties will be closed during the summer on Sundays and plans are being made for the law enforcing officers of the four counties to exert all their authority in an attempt to enforce their ruling.

Detroit—The police, who have been battling hordes of armed thugs and bandits engaged in killing and pillaging in branch banks about the city, were given another case to run down when two men held up three employes of the Strathmoor branch of the Northwestern State bank at Grand River and Freeland and escaped with $7,000. The robbery took place just at closing time.

Flat Rock—Scores of families in the valley of the Huron River between Flat Rock and Lake Erie were driven from their homes when the dam at the power plant of the Ford Motor Co., here, burst and released millions of gallons of water into the valley. More than 5,000 acres was reported under water. The water was reported more than 12 feet deep in some places by the State Police.

Pontiac—Dr. E. A. Christian, superintendent of the Pontiac State hospital, has accepted the chairmanship of a general committee in charge of arrangements to raise $150,000 in Pontiac to pay half the cost of building a new general hospital. The site has been donated by a local citizen and the Sisters of Mercy, of Dubuque, Ia., are willing to finance the balance of a $300,000 institution.

St. Jospeh—Sheriff Fred C. Franz was at least partly successful when he went before the Berrien county board of supervisors with a request for an increase in his allowance for feeding prisoners. The board decided that law enforcement in Berrien county was costing too much money. In putting into effect several rules of economy, the supervisors cut the jail board allotment down to 35 cents a day.

Lansing—George McManus, of 1428 Jerome street, is held in Lansing jail and his mother-in-law is in the Eaton county jail, waiting transportation to Oscoda county to face a charge of kidnaping. Police and sheriff's departments of Michigan are seeking Mrs. McManus and her 11-year-old daughter, Evelyn Buchanan, whom, it is alleged, the trio spirited away from a country school near Mio.

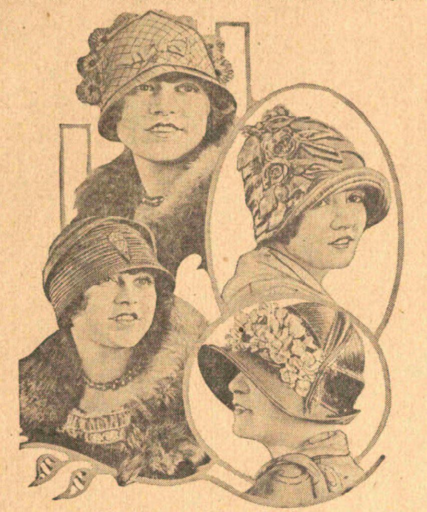
Flint—After compelling him to open the safe in his shoe store on North Saginaw street, two armed bandits forced J. N. Barton into the basement at the point of pistols where one of them tied Barton's hands and feet with shoe strings while the second returned to the store, took $62 from the cash register and $2 in pennies from the safe. Pedestrians said a third man stood guard in front of the store. The three are believed to have escaped in an automobile. Barton was held up about four months ago.

Duluth—The steamer S. H. Robbins, loaded with 450,000 bushels of grain, was unable to move from its dock here because the reduced water levels had permitted the vessel to ground. Two tugs worked several hours in a vain effort to free it, and if further efforts are futile the vessel may be lightered, unless a rise in the water level is predicted. Vessel men here point to this, together with a hydrographic report that the Soo locks level is six inches below last year as evidence that all interlake vessels will be compelled to load light.

NOVEL CROWNS ADORN CLOCHES; UNUSUAL IN NOVELTY SWEATERS

IF IN doubt as to whether the cloche is still in fashion, take a stroll down Broadway or Main street and tabulate for one's self. However, there is a difference between the now and the then of every popular cloche. Analyzing the situation, the small cloche is keeping favor with the public by offering such a fascinating medley of novel crowns, one's interest is not allowed to lag.

For a long time fashion has thus been spending its ingenuity on crowns, brims being considered a negligible quantity, but lo! with the coming of spring brims have burst into sudden glory, that is as far as depth and size are concerned. The latest pokes are mostly brims, and they are getting more so as the season advances. In many instances of these new bonnet shapes, the brim is turned up at the back. Indeed, the turned-up back brim is a definite style tendency. Many of the large hats in the advance guard of summer millinery emphasize this feature. The idea is demonstrated in that charming poke bonnet shown last in the accompanying illustration. This model uses taffeta silk for its brim and fine silk haircloth for the gown. Note how the crown is fitted to the head.



Novel Crowns and Turned Up Brims.

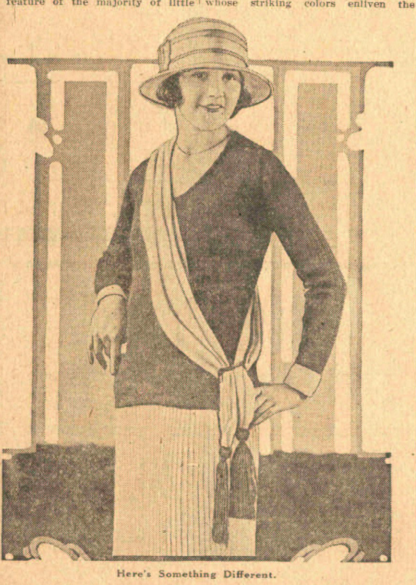
Of the three modish cloches completing this group, it may be said that the crown in each instance shows great depth, this being a characteristic feature of the majority of little shapes. One traces the cloche trend in each brim, although presented in various moods of roll-off-face—for hat number two, slight droop for number one brim, with a restricted turban-bonnet effect defined in the tailored silk model.

Not only do brims roll high at the back in last-minute chapeaux, but the trimming itself rises in tall bows and erect effects directly over the coiffure. This is especially true of the larger-brimmed shapes which are "on the way" for summer conquests. Particularly are soft hair bodies folded up at the back, held into position by soft silken loops or under masses of stemmed roses.

The many "sometimes different" ideas created by knitted outerwear stylists each season somewhat contradict the "nothing-new-under-the-sun" theory. Perhaps the artistically scarfed sweater in this picture is the "exception to the rule," for at a glance it proclaims the unusual. The thrill of newness which it affords is no doubt due to the unique placement of a fine white scarf or sash which is matched, as you will observe, to the cuffs and pocket flap. Not only in name, for this model is known throughout fashiondom as the "student prince" sweater, but in appearance this fetching knitted and sashed blouse is sure of appeal to women of artistic temperament. Indications are that before the season is far advanced the "student prince" sweater will be a pronounced favorite.

There are innumerable other lovely and out-of-the-ordinary things among fashionable knitwear this season. For instance, there are new lacy one-piece frocks knitted of fine rayon which are adorable. They come in "delicious" colorings and their distinctive note is the long knitted sleeve.

The knitted scarf and shawls are marvels of beauty, being lavishly befringed and decidedly colorful. These partake of shawl-like square shapes. Of course, they are going to prove irresistible to the summer girl, for they are ideal over lightsome frocks.



Here's Something Different.

Adding to the glory of things knitted are winsome hat, scarf and blouse sets, whose striking colors enliven the scene of picturesque fashion. Magenta with white bespeaks the last word in color combinations in these sets.

Among sweater novelties a favorite is knitted of white mohair. The collar, cuffs and bindings are of gaily plaided flannel.

Knitted coats in fancy constructions are wonderfully popular, and becoming more so, as time progresses. These abound in novelty touches, such as all-over jacquard patternings, pipings of gold leather, while fancy knitted stitch contributes greatly to their interest. The chenille knitted coat is the latest. Last minute modes stress the knitted suspender skirt.

Effective Ornament

It is so often the little things that contribute the distinctive note to one's costume. Not expensive, and just the thing to lighten the somberness of a black or dark-toned frock, is a ball of cut crystal that swings from a long cord of black silk.

Inventor of Automobile Dies

Kokomo, Ind.—Elwood Haynes, inventor of America's first automobile and internationally known as a scientist and metallurgist, died at his home here following an illness of a few days. In July, 1894, Elwood Haynes, then a young field superintendent for a natural gas company with headquarters at Kokomo, had a queer buggy, without tongue or shafts, towed out onto a country road. He drove it triumphantly back into Kokomo, at the remarkable speed of eight miles an hour, under power generated by a gasoline engine. That, it is claimed, was the first trip of a gasoline driven vehicle in America.

Postal Efficiency Requested

Washington—Postal workers were appealed to by Postmaster-General, Harry S. New, to increase their efficiency at least 5 per cent and at the same time were given warning that incompetent men would be dropped from the service. Now that employes have received an increase in salary, the Postmaster-General believes they should make their work a little more effectual. Increased efficiency would in the aggregate amount to a large sum of money, officials declare. Postmasters were told that each clerk on the average now represents about $7,000 and each carrier $10,000 in revenue.

PAINLEVE AGAIN PREMIER, ORGANIZES NEW CABINET

PAUL PAINLEVE

Paris—After much urging President Doumergue obtained the consent of Paul Painleve to head a new ministry to succeed that of Edouard Herriot. This is the second time that M. Painleve has held that stormy office.

Negotiations have proceeded rapidly for the formation of the new cabinet and its completion has just been announced. Only one member of M. Herriot's cabinet remains. He is Anatole de Manzie, former finance minister.

M. Painleve himself takes the post of minister of war, as well as president of the council, while M. Briand assumed the portfolio of foreign affairs, and Joseph Caillaux, whose political career was thought to have ended when in 1920 he was sentenced to imprisonment and ordered expatriated, will have the guiding hand over France's finances.

Taxi-Plane Service Planned

San Francisco—Distances between San Francisco and other California cities are to be reduced to a minimum, insofar as time is concerned, by the establishment of the first airplane taxi service in the United States. This service has been provided for through a consolidation of the Checker Taxicab Co., of San Francisco and the airplane interests of Walter T. Varney.

Each plane will carry two passengers, a pilot and hand baggage. With two passengers flying for the same destination, the mile rate will be 20 cents, as against the 25c rate for long distance taxi service.

Two Ideas of Quatrain

A quatrain is a poetical stanza of four lines, usually rhyming alternately, but the term is sometimes loosely applied to a poem of four short stanzas.

Michigan Plants To Meet Crop Demands

Michigan farmers are showing an increasing tendency to study crop and market conditions in planning their farm programs, in the opinion of those who are studying crops of the state. As evidence is cited the interest taken in government reports on the outlook of the national wheat crop, and the inclination to sow considerable acreages of spring wheat.

H. C. Rather, extension specialist at M. A. C., comments briefly on the general crop prospects and conditions, and gives interesting pointers for the grain grower, as follows:

It looks as though a reasonable increase in the spring grains might be justified. At any rate, much of the large acreage of alfalfa being seeded on Michigan's better soil might be acompanied by plantings of a bushel of oats or barley per acre up to early May, with reasonable assurance of a fair demand for the grains.

Michigan farmers can wisely plan to put in a normal corn acreage, as practically the entire crop is used in the State. Higher corn prices usually prevail here than in the corn belt proper.

The bean acreage of Michigan has been about right for the past two or three years. There has always been a good demand for red kidneys, and growers on well drained heavier soil, will doubtless find this type of bean a profitable one.

Michigan bean dealers report difficulty in moving the Brown Swedes. This Brown Swedish bean has been on the increase in Michigan in recent years, but most growers would probably do better with red kidneys, which yield fully as well and find a much better market.

Michigan grew about 75 percent of the White navy bean crops of 1924 and it has been marketed at fairly good prices. About the same acreage as last year should be well warranted for 1925.

New Bulletins Show Orchard Practices

Details of correct orchard management are explained and illustrated in three extension bulletins just off the press at M. A. C. These pamplets, which cover some of the most common operations in the orchard, are popular editions of more complete and technical publications issued by the college earlier.

"Orchard grafting", showing by illustration details of handling this important operation, is covered in one of the new bulletins. Another discusses "Fertilizing the Mature Orchard", and a third covers "Pruning Black Raspberries."

The bulletins, all edited by members of the horticultural department at the college, may be had by writing to Bulletin Clark, M. A. C. East Lansing, for extension bulletins 28, 29 and 30.

For Instance A Poet Laureate

The state solons at Lansing have been really and honestly discussing the necessity of Michigan appointing a Poet Laureate. Of course such is necessary. The duties of such a person would be to write cute little verses which would be handy for the speakers of the houses at Lansing to get off before opening the session he would also furnish a few lines occasionally for the senators and representatives to recite at odd times on the floor of the house, in fact it has been noticeable the Legislature was conducted quite along the lines of a "Deestrict Skule" for some time. Our old side partner Hank Sawin of Grand Rapids who a long time ago broke into the newspaper game occasionally furnishes little write ups for the Grand Rapids Chronicle, and this is how Henry hits it off concerning this new functionary:

"GUESS WHO?

O! Michigan, My Michigan,
Your record is so bad
Cheer up! Today be glad and gay
No longer we'll be sad.

Our mighty solons have decreed
From early morn' 'til late
We need a mighty singer now,
A Poet Laureate.

One who will calm our troubled breast
When taxes get too high,
And lull our souls on life's dark crest,
Like songsters in the sky.

No matter what expenses are,
He'll sing of rock and rill.
While we will calmly stay athome,
And foot the little bill.

Her army all mobilized,
Old England holds our fate,
We've stole the thunder from the crown
And sport a Laureate.

And so the search goes gaily on,
This legislative quest
Here's hoping it soon will end,
By finding Edgar Guest."

Did J. Wilkes Booth Die at The Fire?

There seems to be considerable dispute concerning the ultimate end and final disposition of the remains of J. Wilkes Booth, assassin of Abraham Lincoln. People way down in Oklahoma put up the claim that there lived about 1900 a man there calling himself David E. George, but on his death-bed he confessed he was none other than Booth the famous actor who shot Lincoln.

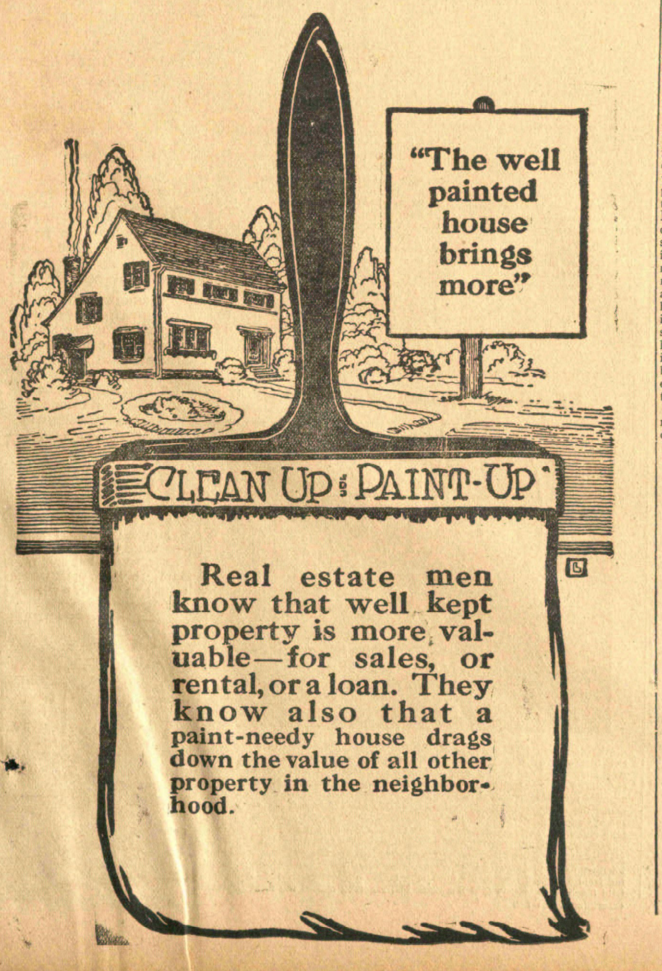
This claim stood until 1923 or thereabouts, when an investigation was made by a representative of the Dearborn Independent. Among the people about the city of El Reno, Oklahoma, were some intimately associated with the man George and after his confession to which they gave full credence, caused his body to be suitably embalmed and for many years exhibited it to the public in a local garage at that point. The culprit, apparently having no living kin, the body became the property of a former creditor named Smith, who at one time thought of taking the relic about the country as a show, but on account of some difficulty in getting a permit from the authorities, gave it up. It seems that "George" became tired of life for some reason and suicided with a dose of strychnine. What has caused most of the dispute since was a confession he is claimed to have made and wrote out on paper and signed "J. Wilkes Booth."

However, these people upon being interviewed, did not stick to the original story but some of the more ignorant ones fully believe the yarn and looked with awe upon the mummified corpse. As a matter of fact the whole business is pure bunk. Testimony of reliable people in the city where this took place, shows that David George was a miserable no-account bum who eked out a somewhat frugal livelihood by house painting and was of a tired disposition—in fact just filled in the time when he was not drunk. He had been good-looking and resembled Booth in complexion, hair and mustache, also in size and build. He had been a man of some education and when well sogged on Oklahoma bug juice, was wont to reel off a string of stage talk which led many to suspect he had been an actor. It was also ascertained he was a morphine addict. His friends have told very conflicting stories about George's finances. Some claimed he always had oodles of coin, and received checks from parties unknown in the East, but investigation shows he was mostly on his uppers, borrowed money of a number and never paid but few. In "George" was just a fair specimen of your average village loafer of those days. He worked when the spirit moved, usually laid about in a comatose state when drunk or drugged, mumbling actor stuff.

At last he owed for paint and a lot of other things, George became discouraged, went to his room and took the fatal dose.

Propagandists among these simple folk kept the fake going for 23 years, and there is no evidence now that the ghastly "relic" has been put out of sight, although the bubble of their gullability was punctured by the Dearborn Independent.

Unless the officers and troops who captured Booth and took care of his remains, erred, he was shot by Sergeant Boston Corbett in the burning barn, carried out and died on the porch near-by. The other conspirators including Mrs. Surratt, were hanged. If anyoue doubts this, they can ask John S. Blackmer of this village as he witnessed the execution.



"The well painted house brings more"
CLEAN UP & PAINT-UP
Real estate men know that well kept property is more valuable—for sales, or rental, or a loan. They know also that a paint-needy house drags down the value of all other property in the neighborhood.

The Fight For Representation

In Lansing the congressmen have been having a hard fight over the matter of re-apportionment of representatives in the districts of the state. Wayne county and Kent with their large population both want larger representation in Lansing and as the law stands are entitled to it, but its a mighty poor law. In the first place the city districts and country districts should be two different precincts, as the interests of the country people are certainly not what the city people want. Wayne county with 21 representatives could certainly boss the state and this is not desirable. Many of the representatives from down state counties as well as up state are wrought up to the fighting pitch over this deal, and it is not strange they should be. Our man up there Dennis Clancy, has already let loose upon the assembled house a few of his ideas as to what is right and what is wrong and by so doing has brought down upon himself the ridicule of Grand Rapids editors. Clancy claims he has been woefully misquoted, and the editors have reported his doings entirely wrong.

Governor Groesbeck is quite mixed in the melee and is accused of trying to influence many votes in the house. Grand Rapids papers stated that Mr. Clancy had called upon the Governor and concerning the re-apportionment they had some words in which the Governor threatened to take away Hillsdale county's prospects for new highways the coming year, unless this apportionment matter was settled to suit him, but Clancy gives the lie to the whole thing so there you are! Taken all around it is an interesting mess, and the sports they pull off up there are real good reading for the tax payers who would like to see something accomplished.

One good act has been consummated: The law has been passed compelling incorporated village councils to publish the proceedings each month as they appear. This is not cooked up to help some newspaper deadheads as some suppose, but simply to give the common people who pay the expenses a look in into how their money is being spent. Heretofore village councils in this neck of the woods, have assumed a sort of none-of-your-business air. At last they will be well aired.

Father And Son Executed

Charles W. Stewart, 51, and his son, Elmer, 23, were put to death in the electric chair for the murder of two prohibition agents a year ago. The men were calm to the last, expressing a desire to expiate for their crime.

The two men were executed for the murder of Sam Lily, a United States deputy marshal, and Deputy Sheriff Lon George, while the officers were searching for prohibition violators.

As he walked to the chair, the son leaned heavily on the arms of the two guards. He smiled faintly as he took his seat and as the prison attendants hurried to bind him he smiled again and said: "Take your time, boys, I'm in no hurry."

He then began to pray, his supplications being cut short by the throwing of the switch.

It is now rumored that the State of Michigan is not able to build as much highway this year as promised a short time ago. Owing to a few shortages in the yield of the gas tax this is the result. The dividends accruing from gas tax do not seem to mount up as it was hoped and futhermore a large item is developing for up-keep of roads already graveled. The last reports said the road work this season would likely be somewhat limited. This applies to more remote highways. It is probable the work on M-23 will not be stopped.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Did you ever try dried peas, baked? If not, here will be a new dish. Soak the peas over night and boil them until tender in the same water. Drain and put to bake with an onion and a scored piece of fat salt pork.

Baked Onions.—Peel six medium-sized onions and boil until tender. Drain and place in a shallow pan which has been well-buttered. Pour over one cupful of milk in which a tablespoonful of tapioca has been stirred, add a tablespoonful of butter, salt and pepper to taste. Place in the oven and bake until a light brown.

Banana and Rice Pudding.—Take two cupfuls of cold boiled rice, add one-half cupful of cream, with sugar to taste, then add a sliced banana or two. Bake for fifteen minutes. Serve hot or cold.

Syrian Meat Dish.—Cut three pounds of lean meat from a shoulder of mutton, cut into inch-pieces. Slice three large onions and brown them in four tablespoonfuls of fat. When partly cooked add the meat, stirring until well-browned; add a pint of tomato juice and set back to simmer for an hour. Season to taste. Scald three-fourths of a cupful of rice with a pint of boiling water, cook ten minutes, drain, add three tablespoonfuls of bacon fat and cook until the fat is all absorbed. To the fried rice add three cupfuls of boiling water and cook in an open saucepan until the water is all evaporated. Brown half a cupful of nut meats in a half teaspoonful of butter. Serve the meat in the center of the dish, with a border of rice and sprinkle the browned nut meats over all.

Garcia Salad.—Cut equal parts of celery and apples into strips two inches long. Serve on lettuce with French dressing, garnish with eighths of ripe tomato and a slice of truffle.

Lambs' Hearts.—As lambs' hearts are small, one should be served for each portion. Prepare them, slash and wash well, removing the arterial walls. Place in a deep dish and cover with any good rich stock, adding worcestershire sauce and tomato catsup to give piquant flavor. Cover closely and cook for two hours.

Dear Johnnie — Since I have been in Florida I have been very much impressed by the protection this state gives to its wild animals and birds. You dasn't kill them under penalty of the law. LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

What Are the Movies Doing to Your Children?

What are the movies doing to our children, anyway? First, let us get it clearly in mind that they are doing far more than merely amusing them; they are educating them giving them their ideals, their standards and much of their knowledge of life. Let us go to a moving picture show together, not to see the picture, but to study the children who are there, and to note their reactions to the picture.

It is a very lovely picture in which there is not a thing harmful to any child. Notice how completely the children are absorbed in it. Every child sits forward in his chair, body tense, eyes intently fixed upon the screen. Ready laughter comes at the funny places, intense silence in their tribute to the sorrowful moments of it, and frantic applause comes when the hero meets with good fortune or is rescued from a dangerous situation. Their reaction to the picture is complete. Now this picture is good a clean interpretation of a beautiful child classic, but it is followed by the "comic". Bathing beauties in a daring state of undress are flashed upon the screen and greeted with shouts of laughter by the children. Later there is a prize fight, brutal, sickening, which creates wild excitement and enthusiasm. Notice that the children's reaction to the cheap and bad "comic" is just as complete and intense as it was to the lovely classic.

Now that we have discovered for ourselves is that children react most intensely to the moving picture, that their hearts and minds are wide open to their influence, let us look at the pictures themselves. Go to a number of motion picture theaters and study the pictures shown with this question uppermost, "What things in this picture are harmful to child life?" A study of the pictures from that angle will reveal some disconcerting things. Keep in mind, also, the fact that a child learns most and is also most impressionable when he is interested and amused, as h invariably is when he goes to the movies.

First, there will almost certainly be drinking, that is, one or more of the characters, at least once in the picture, will drink. If there is a comic they will very likely produce the drink in a way that reveals the fact that they have succeeded in getting it in defiance of the law, or have made it secretly. All the characters will manifest great joy at the sight of the liquor, the one who bought or made it will be the object of admiration and congratulation, It will be a jolly scene. The good law-abiding citizens in the audience will laugh at the scene, and so will the children. Question for thoughtful grown ups to consider: If a child laughs often enough at such a scene can he be expected to grow up with very strong convictions regarding prohibition? Add to this the fact that the characters, both men and women, smoke. Have you seen a picture in which there was no smoking? Another queston for thoughtful parents: If a boy's movie hero smokes, what will be his attitude toward smoking? If a girl's movie heroine or hero, (most likely) smokes, how will she feel about smoking?

We have become so used to indecent dress in the movies that it is hard to realize to what extremes it has gone. But in studying pictures critically, with the child audience in mind, it is appalling to discover how far the movies have gone in this matter. A thoughtful father may ponder the effect upon his adolescent boy. There will almost surely be a sex problem, with a dramatic love scene, and prolonged embrace. When this happens watch the adolescent youth. Watch the boy's arm slip about the girl; a girl's hand slip into the hand of the boy who is with her; watch them sit closer and closer. Notice their bright eyes and flushed faces. They aren't bad, they are just in the clutch of stormy adolescence when life forces are making terrific problems for each of them, and we help them out by permitting the motion pictures with their sex lure.

There will surely, in some of the pictures, be a shooting, or stabbing, a brutal fight, perhaps a lynching or a suicide. These a child or adolescentboy or girl should never look upon. It is a fact that whatever is clearly and sharply impressed upon the mind tends to work itself out in action of some sort. So we see little boys with toy pistols shooting each other, fighting battles with swords, shooting themselves and pretending to fall down dead. With many it goes no further than this, but what thinking person can fail to see a connection between the movies and the juvenile crime wave with which we are now struggling.

MOTION PICTURES AND MARRIAGE

Civilization has always been built upon the highest ideals of the race. The decay and disintegration of civilization begins when people lose sight of their ideals and begin to look with liberality on the questionable or evil. When, in other words, they lose their sense of moral values. That we are very rapidly losing our sense of moral values in our attitude toward marriage and divorce can hardly be denied when as early as 1885 the United States has more divorces than all the rest of the Christian world, and when there has been a constant increase in the proportionate number of divorces in this country ever since, until today there is one divorce for every 6 marriages.

America certainly faces a most urgent need for constructive ideals of love, marriage and home life. Not only is that need being met in a very inadequate way but there are many forces at work in our land which are undermining any constructive work which is being done and sowing with intense rapidity the seed of social disease. Among those forces none is more prominent or potent than the motion picture. The fact that its main purpose is amusement and entertainment is no reason that it should undermine the home, the mainspring of the nation's life, or poison the social ideals of our youth.

The bad motion picture is more deadly than poison literature, for it leaves its imprint on the mind earlier and with intense realism, for it enters the eyegate. Let us not forget, that for the same reason a good picture is an unusual power in the building of ideals.

Just what is the relation of the motion picture to our social conditions? What is the trouble in American social life and home life?

First: Most unfortunate marriages are based wholly or almost wholly on physical attraction and the motion picture is giving a most exaggerated idea of physical appeal and all but ignoring any charm of personality; whereas intellectual and spiritual comradeship is essential to the constant association which makes up the life of a home.

Second: A sense of the sacredness of love and marriage should be implanted in the minds of our youth, but these relations are constantly made cheap and commonplace on the screen today.

Third: Divorce should be looked upon with regret as a last resort in most extreme cases, but it is so presented as to seem necessary and desirable in any case of married infelicity and the case with which it is secured is left to the imagination, so there is no apparent difficulty. No wonder some girls are saying when perplexed as to which admirer to marry "Well, I will marry so and so for such and such a reason and if it does not turn out well, I will get a divorce."

Since literature, art, drama, motion picture and humanity in general testify that lover, marriage and home are most vital to human life and happiness, there can be no possible excuse for poisoning the ideals of a nation relative to these sacred relations. Futhermore, if we are concerned in the future of our nation and of the boys and girls whom God has entrusted to us, there can be no possible excuse for us to stand idly by and see these mainsprings in our nation's life snapped by any individual or organization which has so lost its sense of moral values as to undermine the ideals of our youth for personal profit.

Winter Resorters Are Coming Back

There has been an awful exodus of resorters from Michigan to Florida the past fall and winter and along about this time they are coming back in great flocks. Of course it is easy tc see why Michigan well off people prefer to sojurn in Florida, neither does a man have to buck up against income taxes and all property that is taxed is limited to a five mills tax. No millionaire or pauper is asked by Florida to make a sworn statement as to his worldly goods and no examiners snoop around the bank and investigate a man's private deposits. Taken all together, the state of Florida is not so bad to live in. and now you know why W. J. Bryan and our own Uncle Henry Ford like to bask in her sunlight. Michigan is a hard taskmaster, and wants every cent in taxes possible, in fact it has come to be said that everything is taxed in Michigan except water and air and these two commodities not being measureable cannot be reached by the tax gatherer.

When our state wakes up to her opportunities as a summer resort she will make taxes a little milder and a few other necessities a little more getable, and bid for the summer resort trade of the United States which , by right should come here on account of our Great Lakes.

Farmer's Value to Nation

To some this movement away from the farm is an alarming symptom. Yet as a nation we are not so much concerned with the specific number of people living on farms as we are with the volume of food production, and government figures show that this is being maintained.

In no small degree our commercial development of the past seventy-five years has been made possible by increased efficiency in food production on the part of the farmer. Power and power uses are well established on the farm. Today the American farmer uses power, lots of it, and he will undoubtedly use an increasing amount in the future. Rural progress depends in no small measure upon this.

Power Now "the" Thing

In view of what the use of power on the farm has already accomplished, it is no wonder that the farmer is looking over the fence into the electrical field. He wants to know what agricultural possibilities are to be unlocked by this mysterious power which flows noiselessly over the wires.

No one can doubt that the general introduction of electric service on the farm will improve living conditions, making available to rural districts practically every convenience now enjoyed by urban dwellers. Electric service has literally revolutionized living conditions in the cities, and agriculture is determined to keep step with this development.

Vision, Courage, Study Are Needed

To secure maximum results with minimum costs, in working out applications of electricity to agriculture, vision, courage and determination to succeed are essential. The power problems of the farm must be investigated by the best talent available, and the application of electricity to this field must be developed along sound economic and engineering lines.

Electricity has already done so much for our urban population that maximum rural development without electric service is unthinkable. We will never be on a secure foundation until the farm is on as attractive a basis as the city, from the viewpoint of living conditions and business opportunity.

tice, Prof Rice declares, is the principal reason for dissatisfaction with the use of lights to increase egg production.

The type of lighting unit which his experiments found the most effective is a standard 40-watt Mazda lamp with a cone-shaped reflector sixteen inches in diameter at the base by four inches high and hung six feet from the floor. This gives light for the perches as well as the floor, and so prevents any of the hens from remaining on the roost when it is desired to have them scratching for feed.

IS PROLONGING LIFE

Women on Farm of the Future May Find Electricity Adding to Their Years.

Several men who are leaders in the farm electrification movement have expressed their belief that the farmer appreciates fully the humanitarian aspect of electric power on the farm, over and above its value to him in dollars and cents.

Dr. E. A. Stewart, of the University of Minnesota, declares that farmers will have electricity in order to make life convenient and happy, irrespective of whether or not they are always able to make their electrical installation show a dollars and cents profit.

Simultaneously, M. H. Aylesworth, executive manager of the National Electric Light Association, asserts his conviction that electricity will add from fifteen to twenty years to the lives of farm women and will in many cases change misery into happiness.

"Water in the home, pumped by electricity, the electric iron, the electric washing machine, the vacuum cleaner, electric range, refrigerator, percolator—all these things are unknown to farmers' wives and daughters. Electricity will bring them. And they will be happiness-makers, although not a bit more important than the advantage of electric lights."

Broadcast Drama With Music

Broadcasting a radio play, with musical accompaniment, all in one operation is the latest achievement of WLS, the Sears-Roebuck station, Chicago Ralph Emerson, one of the most famous pipe organ performers of the country, whose evening recitals are among the outstanding features of the station supplies the accompaniment to special radio plays broadcast by WLS Theater under the direction of Harry Saddler. So the big organ will not drown out the voices of the performers, a specially constructed studio near the Chicago lake shore has been constructed, which enables the two groups to work harmoniously together. By the use of two microphones, one for the group of players and the other down among the organ pipes, the two sounds are brought together by a special wire connection. The organ has a hundred stops, ranging from a cannon roar to the blow of a traffic cop's whistle. It is this realistic touch to his music that has made Mr. Emerson one of the most popular entertainers of WLS.

"It's the drink in you. She isn't better-looking than any average woman in Avonmouth. See here, are you going to bust up the game or are you not?"

"I'll show you!" shouted Lancaster, breaking from Myers' grasp and rushing from the room.

He met the women at the foot of the stairs. His face was flushed, his hair disordered, his manner maniacal.

"You sneak, what are you butting into this show for?" he demanded of Mrs. Fraser.

The matron, cowed by his violence, trembled. She tried to pull Joan toward her room; then caught her eye and made the slightest gesture indicative of shooting. Lancaster raised his first threateningly.

The matron did not lift a finger to defend herself. She stood quite calmly, awaiting the expected blow; perhaps it was some atavistic trait inherited through generations of poor ancestors; and yet, servile although it might have been, the look on the woman's face was almost heroical.

The man let his fist fall; he seized the matron by the shoulders and pushed her back into her room. He turned the key in the lock and put it in his pocket.

"That's settled, I reckon," he said with satisfaction.

Joan's hand went into her pocket. Her fingers closed about the revolver handle. But at that moment the secretary, who had come out of his room, went up to Lancaster.

"See here, now," he began to remonstrate, "have a little sense, doctor. If you're bent on busting everything up, you and I part company."

The other turned on him with so menacing a gesture that Myers flung up his hands in despair and went back into his room. Joan stood facing the doctor alone. At that moment her decision was nearly ripened, and she felt conscious of no fear of him at all.

If he attempted violence she knew what she would do. But he did not lay hands on her. He stood leaning against the newel post at the foot of the stairs, watching her face.

Joan was searching his eyes for the least sign of the man she had known, and he broke off, scowling and wincing under her stare. Above his words was the sound of the beating rain, the lashing wind; and from within the matron's room Joan heard Mrs. Fraser crying in prayer:

"O Lord, save her!" she wailed. "Save that girl this night! O Lord, from the devil! Save her! Save her, O Lord!"

"Maybe I got you wrong," continued the doctor. "But if I did, I ask you, who's to blame? Didn't you come to me at my house in Avonmouth and ask for your job back? Weren't you as sweet as sugar when you wanted something out of me? And didn't you agree to come up here to work for me? Well, what's the inference, then? You can have your job back if you want it. But I can do better by you than that. You're too pretty for a nurse's job, and I told you so that day you turned on me in the theater like a wildcat. Now, then! It's up to you! Your move, partner!"

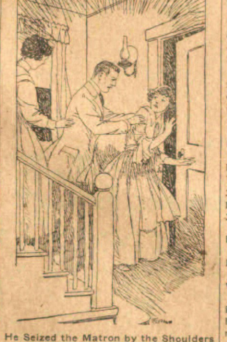
Joan tried to push past him, but he remained at the foot of the stairs, blocking her way.

"Let me pass, please!" she cried. "I'm going to leave the institute at once."

"Without your hat?" he sneered.

"Let me pass at once!"

"Well, I reckon I can't stop you," he rejoined. "Just one word more, though. Do you realize your situation? Do you know what people will say when you go to them with crazy stories about me? Nobody will think you came down here to the notorious John Lancaster after he'd fired you just because you were such a wonderful nurse that he couldn't do without you. What sort of reputation do you expect to have in Avonmouth? You can go, but you won't go there. Not back to Avonmouth, understand that well. I'll hound you out of the town, you little double-crosser!"



He Seized the Matron by the Shoulders and Pushed Her Back Into Her Room.

For the first time Joan felt her spirit begin to shrink from the ordeal. She was cowed, she was almost as helpless as if he had used physical violence toward her. And through the baneful dream she was aware that Myers had come out of his room and was watching the scene from the end of the hall, wearing a smug, complacent smile. Myers was getting his way and having his revenge in one.

And because the situation was too horrible for belief, Joan could remember only the Lancaster of the yesterday. She ran to the man and caught him by the arms, and looked into his face with pathetic earnestness.

"I'm going to stay, John!" she cried. "My faith is stronger than that. I remember what you have said to me, and I remember my promise to you. Some day you will come to yourself and everything will be clear. I shall call to the John Lancaster I know against the man who claims to be he and is not."

"What do you mean?" shouted the other. "Whom do you take me for?"

"You are not the John Lancaster who won my love," cried Joan, with an impassioned gesture. "Let your better self hear and understand me. You asked me to stay and fight your battle with you, and nothing shall drive me from you till you tell me to go; and not even that; nothing shall make me falter till I have won you again."

The man's eyes blazed. "You're right; you're dead right there, Joan!" he cried, and caught her in his arms. He pressed his lips to hers.

She struggled wildly in his grasp. "Let me go!" she panted. But she could not free herself. She screamed. The matron's voice shrieked through the door. "Shoot him!" she cried. "Shoot him dead! Shoot him!"

Joan wrenched her arm free and struck at the man, but he pinioned it again.

"I've got you, Joan!" he cried triumphantly, "and nothing under heaven shall make me let you go."

Held as she was, Joan got her fingers into her pocket. She grasped the little revolver and pulled it forth. She thrust it upward into the man's face. He recoiled with an oath, squinting at the weapon, his face convulsed. And in that moment knowledge came to Joan Wentworth.

"You are not John Lancaster!" she cried.

As she spoke they heard the sound of halting footsteps on the porch. The door swung slowly open. Joan's hand dropped to her side, she slid the revolver mechanically into her pocket; she tried to cry but could not.

Upon the threshold of the door, looking out with a wry, distorted grin on his pale lips, was the man who had held her. And on the threshold, looking in, with eyes drug-clouded, swaying and clutching at the door-pillars to support himself upright, was the John Lancaster of yesterday. And even Joan, with all her love and hate, could not have told the one man from the other.

But with a cry she ran to Lancaster, and caught at him, and felt his arms about her.

Chapter XI

It seemed to Joan, long afterward, like some dreadful picture, the swaying man upon the threshold, to whom she clung, and his double within; and then the rasping voice of Myers broke the long silence.

"Well, well," said the secretary, rubbing his hands together, "here's a pretty kettle of fish. It will all have to come out now."

The Lancaster within the door turned his eyes from Joan to Myers; his passion and rage had frozen into malevolence.

"Don't put the blame on me," said Myers acidly. "I warned you to get rid of her."

Strangely, at that moment Joan felt that she, in spite of her physical weakness, was the dominating figure in the play, and the controlling mind as well.

John Lancaster advanced into the hall. His double, who had drawn back a pace or two, stood watching his efforts to steady himself with a scornful smile. Joan put her hands on her lover's arm; it seemed unbearable that he should display his weakness for them to mock at.

But then, glancing into his face, she saw that, weak as he was, and morphine-ridden, too, it was John Lancaster himself, virile in personality and mind, who had come back. The devil who had been exorcised had returned into his swept and garnished chamber, but he could claim only the physical domain. The body was afire with the accursed drug, but the soul of John Lancaster looked from the cloudy eyes, a man's and not a weakling's.

And Joan knew that it was through no fault of his that he had come back enchained, and that her love had borne him throughout the day and kept his spirit whole.

Lancaster's double turned fiercely upon the secretary.

"Yes, it is a pretty kettle of fish," he retorted, "and it's going to be fried. We'll have this out tonight. Curse you, why didn't you stay here at your post, instead of running to me? Were you afraid of this girl?"

"Who is this man?" Joan asked Lancaster.

"My half-brother and my evil spirit," he answered.

"Why don't you order him to go? Why don't you order them both to go?"

"Because," replied the other, sneering, "John Lancaster sold me his birthright for a mess of pottage—morphine pottage. That's why. Because it is I whom the world knows as John Lancaster, and not that outcast, who has sunk so low that he sold his very name for drugs."

"That is a lie," said Lancaster. "You stole my name. You devil, you have robbed me of my manhood these four years past."

"Gentlemen," cried the secretary, "we've got to talk this matter over, and this isn't the place. If the agreement has worked any injustice to Doctor Lancaster, no doubt it can be readjusted. It is clear that we've got to come to a sensible understanding. Let's face the facts like men, and talk it over in the doctor's room. And this girl had better go upstairs," he added.

"Miss Wentworth stays with me," said Lancaster.

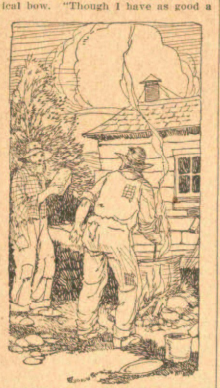
The double and the secretary exchanged ironical glances. It was evident that they did not feel themselves to be in the position of trapped conspirators.

"Doctor Lancaster, if you cannot order them to leave, is it necessary that you should be drawn into a discussion now?" Joan asked.

"Yes, it is necessary," said Lancaster. "I'll fight this thing with Lawson to a finish tonight."

"Lawson?"

"I believe that I am Lawson," said Lancaster's half-brother, with an ironical bow. "Though I have as good a right to the name as Doctor Lancaster here. Perhaps I should have introduced myself before. But now that we are all introduced I am ready to accept Mr. Myers' sensible suggestion."



Became a Common Tramp and Wandered About the Country With Hoboes.

They went toward Lancaster's room. Joan perceived now that the doctor's weakness was purely a physical one; he dragged his limbs slightly, the curious result of the morphine poisoning that she had noted before. But he was gaining strength rapidly, and his will had never been stronger.

This was the last battle, of which he had so often spoken to her. This fight must end his captivity.

She went into the room with him, confident in that belief. Myers closed the door behind them and placed his thickset body in front of it. It was astonishing to see how Lancaster braced himself for the ordeal. He drew himself up, standing erect, and faced the others.

"Doctor Lancaster has the floor," said Lawson mockingly. "At least, I understand that the proposal to revise our agreement comes from him."

"Joan, I owe you an explanation," said Lancaster, turning toward the girl. "This morning, after I had operated, I was called to the house which people think is mine—which should be mine," he added with sudden vehemence. "I was told it was an urgent case. I found these men there. They drew me into an argument, and in the heat of it Myers plunged a needleful of morphine into my arm."

"To quiet you, because you were becoming violent and injuring yourself," sneered the secretary. "Yes, I did, and I left you in good hands."

"They left me senseless in the consulting room, but I managed to force my limbs to obey my will. John Lancaster had still a little more will power than they had counted on. And John Lancaster's name was enough to conjure up a special train this afternoon, though they had robbed him of his money."

Joan put her hands on Lancaster's shoulders. "That is all you need to tell me," she said quietly. "I knew you had been trapped by them. I never doubted you."

"Eight years ago," said Lancaster, "I was a man respected in Avonmouth and everywhere throughout the South. Then a domestic trouble overtook me. You know what that was, Joan. It broke me down. I could not cope with life. I lost my grip on reality, gave up my work—"

"Yes, John, now we're getting at the truth," interposed Lawson bitterly. "You, the honored head of the Southern hospital, became a common tramp and wandered about the country with hoboes, and I have been living down your reputation for you. Go on, John. Don't skip the interesting parts."

Expression Actually an Invitation to Death

The origin of some common expressions is always interesting, and whether the following is authentic or not is an open question. When in ancient days the weaving industry of Halifax, England, was a cottage craft—a farmer's family working on clumsy handlooms—the "pieces" used to be spread out on the hillside, and were therefore peculiarly liable to theft.

Particular crimes led to particular remedies, and a custom, which had the authority of a local law, grew up, that anyone convicted of stealing cloth to the then value of 13 pence halfpenny was liable to immediate execution, a drastic law which naturally safeguarded the cloth industry.

Punishment was carried out, not by hanging, but by a sort of guillotine. This was the Halifax gibbet law, the name of which is preserved by a still standing street in the town, while the actual knife of the gibbet may be seen in the old manor rolls office at Wakefield. Halifax thus acquired a reputation among thieves and vagabonds as the last town in England desirable to visit. And to tell anyone to go to Halifax is equivalent to bidding him to "Go hang!"—Chicago Journal.

A Common Place

The chief danger in platonic friendship is that it so frequently ends in matrimony.—Duluth Herald.

FARM POULTRY

CONTROL OF ROUP BY SANITARY RULES

Contagious roup is probably caused by unsanitary conditions of the henhouse and yards. It is aggravated by cold, damp weather. Correction of the causes, so far as possible, is most advisable, as remedies are slow working and not sure in effect.

It causes a loss, not only from a heavy death rate, but also from the interference with egg production and weakened vitality in breeding. It is very contagious, especially in damp, cold weather, and attacks both young and old stock.

Contagious roup is probably easier to identify than any other poultry disease. It usually starts like a simple cold, with a thin, watery discharge from the nose and eyes. This secretion has a peculiar, offensive odor. Inflammation sets into the nasal passages, eyes and spaces just below the eyeballs. The birds then often cough and sneeze, breathing becomes noisy, and if the air passages of the nose become entirely blocked, they breathe through their mouths. The birds soon lose their appetite and become depressed, their wings drooping and their feathers ruffled. The secretions from the nose and eye change from fluid to a yellowish, cheese-like mass. This grows rapidly about the eyelids and the nostrils. One or both eyes become enlarged and swelling may appear on the head.

The exact cause is not known. Whatever it is, the organism is hard to kill, because it penetrates into the tissues. If the formations about the head are removed, the uneven bleeding surface which is left forms a new mass in 24 to 48 hours.

Infected birds carry the disease from place to place and infect others by contact. Food and water may become contaminated by the secretions from sick birds and healthy birds become infected in this way.

Roup is easily controlled by proper management and housing. Damp, unsanitary, poorly ventilated, overcrowded, drafty quarters are conducive to its spread. The first treatment is to remove the cause at once. Only valuable birds should have individual treatment. A simple cure for the sick bird is as follows: Place it in a dry, well-ventilated place away from the other birds, and give it plenty of fresh water and feed. Every morning and evening remove all the matter from the eyes and nostrils of the bird and dip its head into a solution of bichloride of mercury (1-1000). This is made by placing one 7.3 mercury bichloride tablet in a pint of water. Hold the bird firmly and immerse the head until the eyes are covered, keeping it there a few seconds or until it struggles. In most cases, the following procedure is advisable:

Dispose of bad cases by killing and burning them.

Isolate birds having colds.

Be sure quarters are dry and tight on all sides, with adequate opening in the front for ventilation and light to reach every part of the house.

Allow at least three square feet floor space per bird.

Place a little kerosene on the top of the drinking water or one 7.3-grain mercury bichloride tablet in a gallon of water in a nonmetal container. These should never be used more than ten days in succession.

Place one pound epsom salts per 100 birds in the drinking water or a wet mash.

Judgment in Feeding

Good judgment must be exercised in feeding the pullets after they are mature and are in their winter houses. Usually eight quarts of hard grain is fed to one hundred birds a day. One-third or one-fourth of this amount should be fed in the morning and the balance at night. When about half the birds are laying well they may require as much as ten or twelve quarts per day. Sometimes, however, eight quarts is too much and it is necessary to cut down on this amount. Mash should always be kept before them in hoppers or feeders.

Poultry Notes

Cull nonproducing hens.

Chickens need sunlight to prevent rickets.

It is a good plan during warm weather to keep a little earth spaded up in the shade of a tree for the fowls' dust bath.

Broilers and frys are most profitable when they reach the market before the slower-grown chicks are ready.

There are a good many different systems of feeding the young chicks and a good many feeds which are used for this purpose.

Commercial baby chicks scratch and chick mash may be fed to advantage in place of the home-mixed feeds and can be bought from almost any feed dealer.

The use of the large colony brooder stoves makes it possible to raise chicks in larger numbers and with less labor than can be done when the chicks are brooded with hens.

Turkey eggs may be very satisfactorily hatched in an incubator. Of course it takes a week longer than hens' eggs and the temperature at the beginning of the hatch should be run a little lower than for the hen eggs.

A stream or pond of natural water is an excellent aid in raising geese as they have free access to water at all times. Waste land that is watered, or a swamp that is not fit for anything else can be turned into a profitable piece of land by letting a flock of geese roam over it.

MANY HOUSEKEEPERS TOO ILL TO WORK

How Many Are Finding Relief from Weakness and Pain. Mrs. Brandenburg a Notable Case

MRS. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG
651 37TH STREET, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"I was in a badly run-down condition and I would get weak spells and terrible headaches. I felt so badly last year that I could not do any housecleaning. The minute I would lift or stoop it seemed as if I was going to fall to pieces. I told a neighbor how I felt and she said that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was surely the right thing for me. I took four bottles then and in the fall of the year I took three. I had been treated by a doctor, but he gave me an iron tonic and that did not help me. It seemed that the tonic did not have in it what the Vegetable Compound did. That gave me the strength and ambition I needed and I have gained in weight. This year before I started to clean house I got four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and am taking it right along. I tell all my friends about it and how much good it does me. They can notice it because I have gained in weight. I weigh 118 now and do all my work myself again."—Mrs. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG, 651 37th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Mrs. Earl's Recovery

Horace, Nebraska.—"I had terrible pains and backache, so bad that I could hardly move, and I would have to lie down at times. I read advertisements of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I was so sick that I thought I would try it. My husband knew it was good as he knew a woman it had helped. It took all my pains away and I don't have any backache now. I do my own housework, take care of a few chickens and my garden, and have a little girl three years old to look out for. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends and I will answer all the questions I can, if any one writes to me."—Mrs. ADA EARL, Box 28, Horace, Nebraska.

Oddly Marked Stone May Prove of Value

A rather broad claim is being made for the Leopard stone quarry, in Davie county, as "the only stone deposit of the kind in the world." The leopard stone, or leopardite, as named by the geologists, was discovered on the Phifer property, in the Belmont section, years ago, and the government has at frequent intervals sent agents to get samples of the stone. It is a species of granite marked with black spots, suggesting the leopard.

If the quarrying of the stone on the Harrison farm proves of commercial value, then we might expect development of the leopardite quarry at Charlotte, for the quarrying of the rock would indicate that a use has been found for it in construction purposes of some kind. It would make a beautiful building material, and the wonder is that it has not been adopted by architects long ago.—Charlotte (N. C.) Observer.

WOMEN NEED SWAMP-ROOT

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

Pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness, are often times symptoms of kidney trouble.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

From all appearances the authorities have succeeded in placing Gerald Chapman where they wanted to place him for the past year or two. In some ways, Chapman is more to be admired than are some of the leaders in political life who have deceived the people while pretending to be the friends of the people. For instance there was Czar Fall of New Mexico who used his high position to assist Doheny in procuring control of U. S. oil lands from which Doheny admitted he intended to clean up a hundred million dollars. But neither Doheny nor Fall will ever spend anytime on the rock pile for Fall has powerful political friends while Doheny is supported by Western Roman Catholics to whom he gave two hundred and fifty thousand with which to build a church. Doheny's son, Edward, is one of the head trustees of the University of Southern California and no professor at the University would dare to mention the word "oil" for the professors probably know what happened to Prof. Levine ot the University of Montana who had the audacity to talk about "copper".

Arbor Day

By the Governor

In view of the especial effort of Michigan's Conservation Department and other agencies to create new forests where they once flourished, additional emphasis is this year given to Arbor Day. The one purpose of the observance is to create as much interest as possible in the extreme necessity of tree planting. Human existence to a very great extent depends upon our wood covered land We should never overlook an opportunity to plant trees of all kinds and restore as far as possible the forests of a generation ago.

Therefore, I, Alexander J. Groesbeck, as Governor of Michigan, designate Friday, May 1, 1925, as Arbor Day and strongly urge that every community in the state take some part in fulfilling the intent for which the day has been set aside.

ALEX. J. GROESBECK

Our Cigars Are Good

There's a lot of difference in tastes. Some people prefer a mild, domestic, some like Porto Rican, others will be satisfied with nothing but Havana.

Whatever your taste may be, we've the cigar to suit you.

Some men say that a cigar just before bed time makes them sleep! Some say it keeps them awake. Probably, neither is correct.

When you're wakeful, Dr. Miles' Nervine will give you a good night's sleep without bad after effects.

One of the many automobile disasters of the season is reported on M-23 three miles east of Jonesville Sunday morning when the car of Archie Fenn of South Bend Indiana, ran off the culbert and capsized. We suppose records were being fractured and it is a wonder the whole family were not killed. The wife was hurt and the machine so badly frayed they had to continue the journey by train.

The circus on Tuesday evening under the caption "Henry Prates' Jolly Eight" got on the boards and just managed tc get out of town, although it is positive the "Boss" did not have the price of a gallon of gas after he settled for the house and a few incidentals which were absolutely necessary. It looks like a tie pass for the boys and girls soon unless business picks up. Candidly we want no condemnation for advestising the bunch as we knew absolutely nothing about them. We understand Homer was the objective point from here.

ANOTHER FIRE

The third of a series of disasterous farm fires in this vicity occurred about 1:30 Sunday morning last when the barn on the Addison Farmer farm 5 miles east of North Adams burned to the ground with contents. In the barn were some hay and grain, a team of horses; a veal calf and a dog, all of which were burned. As luck would have it, the cattle were in the open. Bert and Ross Trumble, neighbors were practically first on the scene and had difficulty in awakening the family of Mr. Hanson who reside there. Nothing could be done except to guard other buildings. A large number of automobiles with spectators were soon on the scene.

The loss amounts to around $1,500, with a small insurance on the barn, but the animals were the property of Walter Hanson with no insurance. There is a theory that lightning caused the fire, but neighbors scout the idea, and the origin is as yet undetermined. Looks like incendiary work but may have been a bolt. Considerable sympathy is expressed for the owners and especially Mr. Hanson.

The judges were Addie Taylor and Nettie Smith of the village and Edna Fisk of Jonesville and the decision was in favor of the affirmative side. Music for the afternoon was two vocal solos by Nellie Kenrick with Hilda Williams at the piano and Edith Westcott accompanying on the violin. After singing "America the Beautiful" and repeating the collect, the club adjourned.

Serious Accident East of Town

Ross Delamatter, living east of town on the Frank Smith farm, met with an accident which came near costing his life on Tuesday forenoon as he was blasting out stumps with dynamite. One of the stumps being tamped in and refusing to explode Mr. Delamatter went to investigate when the charge fired throwing out the stump, breaking his left arm and blowing sand and gravel in his eyes. His face was badly lascerated and bled from every pore, both eyes and his mouth filled with debris and his body bruised He was rushed to the house and Dr. McFarland summoned who dressed and bandaged the wounds

Investigation showed one eye seriously injured and it is not known whether the sight can be restored. Particles of grit were thrown with great force into the eyeballs.

We are looking with great anticipation to the 17th of May, to the beginning of the revival services, and Rev. H. G. Hamilton will be with us. Some are not in sympathy with evangelistic or revival efforts. But it has been God's method all through the ages since the founding of the church. Maybe we can improve upon God's methods and may be not. All churches and people are urged to unite in this movement.

The Sabbath school program next Sunday will be in the hands of Jay North's class. A very interesting Temperance program is being prepared. All attend.

Don't forget the Concert May the 15th at the church, put on by our own Epworth choir. Let's boost them! Also the Ladies banquet which is the outcome of the S. 10 lbs. more!

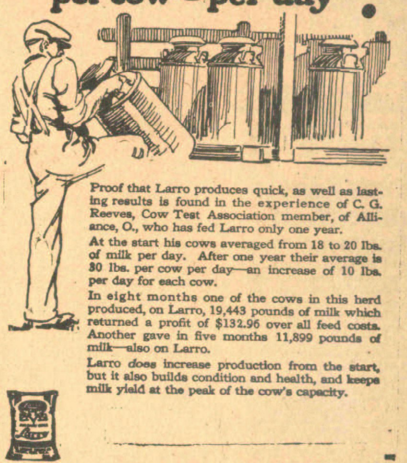
per cow – per day



Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Reapportionment Finally Wins Ending Long and Bitter Fight

Lansing—Reapportionment of representative seats in the legislature was agreed to by the house of representatives by a vote of 68 to 29.

Under the Howarth Bill Wayne county will be entitled to 21 seats in the next legislature, instead of just 14 as at present.

The vote ended a bitter legislative battle that has been unrelenting in its intensity for two years. Harsh personal recriminations have been passed. Other legislation has been sacrificed by one side or the other as they pressed for victory.

And even as the anti-apportionists conceded defeat, they lashed at the governor, the lieutenant governor and members of the legislature who have persistently fought for reapportionment with verbal invective that stung.

The Wood Bill, to reapportion the Senate, is still in the House Apportionment Committee. Gov. Groesbeck, who made a personal issue of Wayne county's demand for Constitutional representation and brought about the passage of the Howarth Bill, is already working for the enactment of the Wood Bill. If it passes, all of the Constitution's demands will have been met.

Transit Bill Passed

With the Callender Rapid Transit Bill passed by both houses of the Legislature and the Darin Super-Highway Bill passed by the House and apparently sure of passage in the Senate, Detroit is in a position to go ahead with the plans of the Rapid Transit commission if the voters so desire.

Erroneous reports from Lansing that the Callender Bill contained limitations which would prohibit Detroit spending more than $60,000,000 for a rapid transit system, or approximately 12 miles of subways, disturbed the Rapid Transit Commission. The Wayne delegation agreed after talks by leading manufacturers and businessmen, to support the Callender Bill without any limitations on special assessments, which meant an act permitting Detroit to build a 40-mile system costing $200,000,000, if the voters wanted it.

Previously members of the Wayne delegation had written into the new draft of the bill, as prepared for the Governor after the commission's original bill was found unsatisfactory by him, a provision limiting special assessments. The Governor's draft contained no such limitation.

City Bond Issues Limited

The House passed the Evans Bill designed to curb extravagance in municipal improvements and to regulate municipal bond issues. The measure was part of the administration tax program. It has gone to the senate. The important features of the bill are those which insist that municipalities must provide adequate funds for the retirement of bonds. Bonds must either be issued serially or a sinking fund must be built up, periodically and consistently. The state treasurer would be required to approve all bond issues.

Railway Bus Lines Approved

The second of the trio of railroad bus bills introduced by Senator Horatio H. Karcher, of Rose City, was passed by the Senate by a vote of 20 to 7. The bill gives steam or electric railroads permission to establish motor bus or truck lines in conjunction with or supplanting their rail lines. It was originally provided that they could be established in extension of the rail lines, but that provision was killed in committee.

School Bill Passes House

The Snow Bill, which is expected to take the rural schools out of petty county politics and place them under the supervision of men of constructive vision passed the House by a vote of 73 to 8. It would do away with the elective office of county school commissioner and substitute a county board of education of five members with power to employ a superintendent of schools.

Defeat For 'Beauty Parlor' Bill

Representative Cora Reynolds Anderson's "Beauty Parlor" bill went down to defeat in the general landslide accompanying the dethronement of Charles Culver, of Detroit, as chairman of the Wayne delegation in anything save name. Culver's connection with the bill was credited with causing the defeat, which was by a vote of 44 to 42.

Chiropractor Bill Fails

A bill to license chiropractors met defeat in a senate committee. It was introduced by Senator David Butler.

Disability Pay Beaten

Michigan Federation of Labor workmen's compensation bill has been killed. The committee on labor, by secret ballot voted against reporting the bill out on the floor for consideration of the house as a whole. The vote was nine to three. The committee split on the issue of amending the measure before placing it before the house.. John Crutchfield, of Saginaw, a miner, and Edward R. Carter, of Delta county, freight brakeman, stood firm against any amendment.

Appropriations Meet Protest

Opposition to the vast appropriations being made by the legislature without providing the funds to meet them, has appeared in the House. Rep. Loomis K. Prestonof Berrien County, objected when the House adopted 16 measures carrying more than $3,000,000 without the formality of discussion or a record roll call. The failure of the legislature to attach tax clauses to scores of building appropriation bills promises to force the State administration to increase the State tax rate next year.

Grand Rapids—A price parley held here by Western Michigan canners and fruit growers failed to bring about an agreement regarding prices for fruits delivered at canning plants during the coming season. AILMENTS OF YOUNG GIRLS

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound School Teacher's Experience

Evanston, Wyoming.—"A few years ago I had troubles every month such as girls often have, and would suffer awfully every time. I was teaching school and it made it hard for me as I had to go to bed for two or three days. One day my mother suggested that I take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did, and it did wonders for me. In the course of a year I married and after my first baby was born I got up too soon and it caused a displacement. This troubled me so that I could hardly walk or do my housework. I knew what the Vegetable Compound did for me before so I took it again. It strengthened me and now I have five little kiddies. The eldest is six, the baby is five months old and I have twin boys three years old and a boy of five years. I do all my own housework, washing and ironing, and I never felt better in my life. I owe my health to your wonderful medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."—Mrs. VERBENA CARPENTER, 127 2nd Avenue, Evanston, Wyoming.

U. S. and Canada Order Survey Of St. Lawrence River Waterway Project

Washington—After negotiations of more than a year, the way has been cleared for active undertaking of the engineering survey of the St. Lawrence River deep waterway project through final agreement between the United States and Canadian governments on instructions to govern the joint engineering board's duty of the problem.

The final draft of instructions to the board, made public stimultaneously in Washington and Ottawa with the complete correspondence in the negotiations, showed a compromise finally was reached in the matter of water diversions to be considered in studying the power possibilities of the project.

By this the joint board is directed to consider in its study the effect of natural water levels in the St. Lawrence River of water diversions from the Great Lakes or the river made under license of either government.

Secretary Hoover, chairman of the St. Lawrence commission appointed by President Coolidge, declared the completion of the negotiations marked a decided step forward in the progress toward determination of the feasibility of the St. Lawrence project and a final solution of the problem of finding the best route from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic.

Honolulu—The Island of Oahu, far flung western outpost of the United States and key to the nation's web of defense in the Pacific has been transformed by the Black forces, defending the islands from an attacking fleet, into a veritable armed camp, in preparation for the greatest war manoeuvers ever staged.

Senator Wheeler Acquited

Great Falls, Mont.—Senator Burton K. Wheeler, was acquitted of a charge of unlawfully using his influence as a senator before the department of the interior by a jury in federal court here.

The accused received two pieces of good news simultaneously—his acquittal and the birth to Mrs. Wheeler of a daughter in Washington.

VON HINDENBURG ELECTED PRESIDENT OF GERMANY

FIELD MARSHAL von HINDENBURG

Berlin—The people of Germany have elected General von Hindenburg, former leader of the German armies, as president of the republic with a plurality of about 845,000 votes. This has stunned the republican elements, who consider the old war chief a chair warmer for the Hohenzollerns, a representative of the imperialistic ideals which ruled Germany before the World war.

General Von Hindenburg is the first president of Germany to be elected by popular ballot. He was nominated by the nationalist-conservative bloc, to replace Dr. Karl Jarres, who failed of election in the first balloting on March 29. His opponent was Dr. Wilhelm Marx, candidate of the republican bloc, adherents of the Weimar coalition, composed of centrists, socialists, and democrats. The third candidate was Ernst Thaelmann, communist.

Evidently Fighting Owl

Resolving to get rid of a marauder that killed some geese, Henry Murchie, of Island Falls, Maine, set a trap and was somewhat surprised to find that he had caught a large owl. It would seem that the owl had been a pugnacious bird, for from the odor it was quite plain that he had had a recent encounter with a skunk and when he was taken from the trap it was found that his breast and neck were full of porcupine quills.

Kaiser Bill Is Altogether Too Happy

The election of General VonHindenberg to the office of President of Germany comes as a surprise to many in this country who have supposed despotism is dead in the Fatherland. A clipping from the Jackson Daily News gives a somewhat yellow exposition of it as follows:

"The former Kaiser at his chateau at Doorn, Holland, last night expounded significance and importance to Von Hindenberg's election as related to the restoration of the monarchy and the Hohenzollern dynasty. William, who seemed in excellent spirits, spoke to a home circle audience including his wife, the Princess Hermine, her two children, his Court Marshall Von Moltyke and others of his former Imperial entourage as well as two high officials from Germany and one German Ambassador However, the Hohenzollern banner no longer floats from the chateau to-day.

After the speech the audience broke into enthusiastic cheers of "Hoch Der Kaiser!" The servants were treated to a generous allowance of wine to celebrate the occasion. Despite this celebration it is said by well informed persons that VonHindenberg's victory is less likely to effect the ex-Kaiser personally than it is the former Crown Prince whose activity and influence in military quarters has been increasing. It is understood that the Princess Hermine brought caek that impression from her last trip to Berlin."

As straws indicate the direction of the mind, so the recent complexion of politics in Germany are anything but good news to either France or America, especially the former, which has good reasons to fear certain factions east of the Rhine. Von Hindenberg is to all intents and purposes a prototype ot the ex-kaiser and there is littlo to choose beteen an absolute monarchy and anything the General might sponsor. Yellow journalists are predicting another war soon, and the horizon of Europe to-day has as many clouds as it ever did. France without doubt, will continue the same program of watchful waiting she has followed for two hundred years, and the least move on the part of German militarists might at any time result in a declaration of hostilities.

Flogging Bill Passes Senate

By a vote of 17 to 12, the senate today placed itself on record as approving the old system of punishing criminals incarcerated in the state prisons by repeated flogging administered under the supervision of the warden of the prison.

The vote was on the wood bill which provides that the court may prescribe an additional punishment of flogging for male persons convicted of robbery while armed. The punishment would be administered once each year during the first five consecutive years of the sentence. It does not apply to women, who might be convicted of being accessories to the crime.

The measure, which has been described by Dr. Howard Baxter of Grand Rapids, and other opponents of the measure, as a step backward a revision to the practices of the inquisition and dark ages, now goes to the house tor consideration.

It is considered likely that the lower house will not favor the measure.

The Divorce Mills Keep Grinding

The other day we picked up a paper containing the salacious details of a divorce case in the millionaire class, and the reading was quite edifying to say the least, being a mixture of charges and counter-charges. Wife accused husband of too much absence from home while husband came back at wife with accusations of laziness and alcoholic tendencies. Still another case was in court where the enraged wife took the stand and swore there was an affinity in the matter, a sort of next best friend—and the results were disasterous to home life. Husband cross-billed by saying wife was a professional nagger, a confirmed slouch and he hadn't been able to enjoy himself in her society since they were married. There are several small children in the family and the Judge is trying to be lenient but the alimony in this case will bankrupt most any one except Hank Ford. Another woman told the Judge hubby was afflcted with an unbalanced ration of "white mule" and cocaine, and while in that comatose state he was neither competent or able to keep the family exchequer supplied A husband ascertained that while his duties took him far from home there seemed to be no aching void in his absenee, and upon returning he had found cigar stubs and whiskey bottles upon the mantle, which were none of his. Wife made no rebuttal and so the decree was allowed at once, and so it goes.

There is a general laxity and resulting low moral tone among married couples which is not without it ludicrous phase, but the public at large feels that a law compelling the divorcee to remain single for at least a respectable time would not be amiss. The state solons at Lansing have at different times tried to meet the exigency, but the bill generally falls prey to the spell-binders and is talked to death So far as we know it gets nowhere. The marriage relation appears to be aterribly loose contraption these days.

We do not know why, but the state of society since the World war has been deplorable, and it resulted in a right about face with thousands of decent folks who were at least trying to live right. This is not the result of a poorer understanding or a more carnal mind; on the contrary it is the foul and offensive aftermath of the sojourn of thousands of our best blood within the environs of a Latin nation where moral laws are a rope of sand and religious ideals are flung to the four winds. Those thousands came home with new ideas and far looser habits than when they went across. America promised to return our soldier boys as good as she received them, barring accidents, but did she? Most certainly she did not. Our officers and men in authority permitted doings over across which here would have been little short of scandalous, and to-day we are reaping to the whirlwind.

Some of the boys came home in good shape but most of them got their education over there—in fact they got the most they ever had. That's what makes most of them so wise and so close-mouthed. They now know of matters of which they never dreamed. The results are beginning to tell on daughters sweethearts, wives and sisters, and it won't be many years before we'll be in a nice pickle along the line of morals. We see it mostly in the movies and on the stage; the bathing beach comes next, the dance hall is a ciose third. Inside of ten years we shall be obliged to put public meets under police supervision to guard against indecent exposure of the person, and innocent children will not be safe at any public gathering unattended.

There are those who claim the world has not digressed so far from the perpendicular as this, but they must be blind and deaf. The divorce courts are as good a thermometer as we need to judge social conditions, and divorces are so common that we find them in our midst for the poorest, most asinine reasons imaginable.

If you doubt this spend an hour or two a month in watchful waiting and see what happens!

Future Of The Pheasant

A few years ago the state started the propagation of ring neck pheasant at a great expense, and at the present time they are protected under the game laws. In some sections they are getting numerous and there have been complaints of their disturbing the farmer's barnyard flock of chickens, besides damaging and destroying crops. Just what the future of these imported birds will be, is hard to determine at the present time. Up in Minnesota they have become so thick in certain sections the game department is offering one dollar each for every live bird delivered to the wardens. As fast as they are brought in they are shipped to other sections of the state, where they are not so numerous. It will be interesting to watch the future of these imported members of the bird family in Michigan.

The editor of the DeFuniak Springs (Florida) Herald rises to remark: "While we are not aristocrats ourselves and own several varieties of oil stock, we have never permitted our prosperity to fly to our head and run us crazy. Perhaps our "prosperity" saw the futility of trying to improve on nature, and gave up the job. Be that as it may, for 32 years we have been a "Florida Cracker" proud of this distinction and deeply penitent now if during those 32 years, we have at any time said or done anything that may have brought reproach upon the name. Howbeit, since the Ford car, short skirts, silk stockings and bobbed hair came into vogue we have been distressed to note a change on the part of people who used to eat chittlin's and pay their debts to kinder wince and writhe under the term "Florida Cracker" and to these the more aristocratic 'Floridian" will appeal with especial force.

Signals Blotted Out as Moon Skims Over Sun.

Engineers and scientists were hard at work in laboratory and field observation stations recently when the rays of the sun were temporarily intercepted by the passing moon and great shadows were cast upon the earth. It is well known that the efficiency of radio transmission is affected by the sun's rays and the recent eclipse afforded an opportunity to observe the characteristics of radio waves under ideal conditions.

Observers were stationed in various parts of the country and will soon compare the results of their findings thereby adding to the fund of data which has been accumulating since the ether was conquered only a few short years ago.

The tests conducted included a study of the behavior of short and long waves. The short wave band included 65 to about 100 meters and the broadcast station band between 200 and 500 meters as well as the waves employed in transoceanic radio communication, 8,000 to 25,000 meters. Each of these group of waves were affected differently as the sun's rays were cut off from the earth, according to the observers.

The results of the tests are awaited with great interest by the radio world and it is said will prove highly useful and practical in solving communication problems.

Mr. Harry Hershfield, 241 West 58th Street, New York City.
Dear Harry— This is a swell town—or should I say swelling? The population is 27,000 including real estate agents—without real estate agents it is 7,000. They have a dandy beach here. It is 31 miles long and 150 feet wide at low tide. At high tide it's wet.
There are head-on automobile collisions every few minutes, but that's because the country is so beautiful the drivers can't keep their eyes on the road. It really is the most beautiful country I have ever seen and I've been in Brooklyn and a lot of other foreign countries too. The hotel men down here are bound to make money. The other day I got my bill and found they had added the date in with the rest of the items.
The hotels here are all very patriotic—they run only on the American plan—no European stuff about them. I can't tell you how wonderful it is down here in Florida—you'd better come down and let a real estate agent tell you. Give my regards to Cliff Sterrett and any one else up there who wants them.
Sincerely, Felix Featherhead—

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Mothers And War

We mothers spend our best selves, body and soul, to present to the world sons, perfect physically, mentally and morally, men like unto those counted "fit" in the World War, for instance; sons who are patriotic enough to die for their country; sons who would bless their country by their lives; but out from the training camps they go to battle! That precious body maimed, or shot down mercilessly! Stabbed unto death perhaps with a bayonet—O, the shame of it! That beloved face mutilated—O, the horror of it! If these calamities be missed, that fine braiu shattered, the whole being "gassed" or if all these were missed, the charactes besmirched by overmuch temptation and the sins caused by the circumstances of war.

One mother said during the World War—she had two sons overseas—"I had to take a pledge against thinking of bayonets. I saw bayonets whenever my eyes were closed. I could bear better, far better, the thought of my sons being shot and killed than to think of them being stabbed with bayonets, and left writhing in agony on the battle field. I should have gone stark mad if I had not asked my Father in Heaven to help me not to think of bayonets." O, we mothers know! That body was all ours once. It was so precious! We looked at little pink feet and wondered if there would ever come a time when we would even let them touch the rough earth in our own backyard. A little hoarse cough and we were panic stricken for fear of the baby terror—croup! And then to know perhaps the same throat was cut by a sword those same feet maimed forever! Yet, like Spartan mothers we let them go when our country called. Is there any loftier patriotism? Those sons, and we in the World War believed their going to war was to make an end of war, and it must be so. We mothers demand that it must be so!

How To Avert War

How are we mothers going to prevent war? First, we have the ballot in our hands now. We have been given this power to protect "those whom we have so loved." We shall use it to avert war and to bring the reign of reason instead of the fury of force for the settlement of differences.

We are going to "agitate". We shall no longer hide our feelings. We shall agitate, agitate, agitate, and our sister white ribboners in other lands will agitate until the powers that be in the whole world shall take notice and suppress their petty jealouslies, and their imperial pride, repent of their selfishness, do away with their prejudices, and say "There must be no more war!"

We shall educate the public. We can, we mothers! We are somewhat skilled in methods of mass psychology, we white ribbon mothers, because we have had successful experience in changing the mind of our great nation on the alcohol question; not only in mind but the policy, even unto the writing of an amendment into the Constitution of the United States.

Before we begin the effort to bring the public to peace thinking, we shall educate ourselves. We shall read the utterances of men and women, who are trying to do away with war, and study peace plans and see for ourselves if they be adequate. We shall also study present day problems involved in bringing an "enduring peace" among the nations of the world. We W. C. T. U. mothers are already familiar with the principle that in a reform that will be permanent, an educational program must follow the emotional stirring that gave it birth. This has been manifest in our learning the chemistry of alcohol, and its physical effects. What we have learned has been passed on to the schools through our Scientific Temperance Instruction department. We shall pass on our findings in the peace reform in the same way by urging oratoritorical and essay contests in the schools with some aspect of the peace reform as the subject for declamation, or essay. When we get this peace thinking into the minds of our children, if our dreams do not come true before we pass on to the Higher Life, our children will "carry on," trust them for that!

We will request from our local editors the courtesy of quoting in their columns from the best speakers and writers on the subject of peace, and through this vast medium penetrate with the religion of peace the remotest section of our great country.

As members of evangelical churches, we ask our pastors to preach sermons on peace and international arbitration. We will use all the ingenuity of love to think of ways and means to bring about peace thinking in the public mind.

Then, as praying mothers, we will avail ourselves of the wonderful, mighty privilege of prayer. We will ask Our Father to so guide and influence our representatives in Washington that they no longer will hinder legislation that will enable our nation to officially join other nations in discussing world problems. The National W. C. T. U. has gone on record as endorsing a World Court. At present the only machinery adequate for the settlement of disputes and differences is the League of Nations, of which the World Court is a development. We believe that political differences in our own country can and will be adjusted. We will pray and work to that end. Other nations are seeking to end wars. A peace plan acceptable to all will be found, whatever it is called. To this end will we mothers work and pray, as we follow the standard of the Prince of Peace.

A Song Of Peace

The Son of God goes forth for peace,
  Our Father's love to show;
From war and woe He brings release;
  O who with Him will go?
He strikes the fetters from the slave,
  Man's mind and heart makes free;
And sends his messengers to save
  O'er every land and sea.

The Son of God goes forth for peace,
  That men like brother's live,
And all desire the other's good,
  And other's sin's forgive.
He turns our spears to pruning-hooks,
  Our swords to ploughshares warm,
And war no more its death blast brings,
  Nor men their brothers harm!

The Son of God goes forth for peace,
  Nor lands nor power to gain;
He seeks to serve, to love, to lift;
  Who follows in His train?
A glorious band in every age,
  In spite of scorn and pain,
True sons of God, His peace have made;
  Who follows in their train?

Now let the world to peace be won,
  And every hatred slain;
Let force and greed be overcome
  And love supreme remain.
Let justice rule in all the earth.
  And mercy while we live,
Lest we, forgotten much, forget,
  Our brother to forgive.

We send our love to every land;
  True neighbors would we be;
And pray God's peace to reign in them
  Where'er their homeland be.
O God, to us may grace be given,
  Who bear the dear Christ's name
To live at peace with every man,
  And thus our Christ acclaim.

Argentine Alfalfa Fails In Michigan

That Argentine alfalfa seed, millions of pounds of which are imported into the United States annually, is virtually a complete failure when planted under Michigan conditions, is shown by results of tests at the M. A. C., just announced by the college crops department.

The rapidly increasing acreage of alfalfa in Michigan has created a heavy demand for seed, and farmers who contemplate seeding alfalfa this spring are warned of the fact that not all alfalfa seed offered on the market is adapted to northern conditions.

The lack of adaptation of certain strains for Michigan conditions has been very clearly demonstrated on the farms crops experimental plats at M. A. C. this year, says C. R. Megee, of the college crops staff, Four different lots of Argentine seed were compared with adapted Grimm and Northern Grown Common strains. All lots entered the winter in excellent shape. This spring, each of the Argentine lots showed stands of less than one percent, while the Grimm and hardy northern grown Common strains showed a one hundred percent stand and gave every indication of producing an excellent crop of hay. Owing to the winter killing of ninety nine percent of the plants of the Argentine lots, the stand is a failure and no crop will be secured.

Of the twelve million pounds of alfalfa seed shipped into the United States last year, approximately eight million pounds came from Argentine. From this it is safe to assume that the greater part of the alfalfa seed imported into the United States is worthless, insofar as Michigan conditions are concerned.

Tests conducted by the United States Deparment of Agriculture indicate that Argentine seed has given poor results in practically all parts of the United States where it has been tested.

The Peddler Nuisance

The way to stop any nuisance is to kill while it's new. The reason for peddlers is just starting. Make it a habit at your house to show them they are unwelcome from the start not only because they ordinarily handle inferior goods, not only because by admitting them you are laying yourself open to insults in case you do not buy, but because it is an established fact that in many cases petty robberies and house breaking follow visits of these peddlers. No possible good can come by allowing them to use up your time and much harm may follow.

RADIO WAVES ENCIRCLE GLOBE IN FIVE SECONDS

Engineers Study Results of Record Making Feat.

The mighty transoceanic radio telegraph station at Rocky Point, Long Island responded to an impulse started at the Third Annual Radio Exposition in New York recently, and sent a message flying into space which, reinforced at Paris, France; Saigon, French Indo-China, and San Francisco, Cal., returned to its home station five seconds later.

This was the first time in history that engineers, using the high power radio stations scattered in the four quarters of the globe, have completely encircled the earth with radio waves. Engineers of the Radio Corporation of America claim considerable practical information was gathered from careful observations of the behavior of the apparatus.

Mr. Harper is one of the leading livestock authorities of the country. He gives a series of talks on the livestock situation four noons—Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, and Wednesday evening. He represents a farm organization of 325,000 members—the National Livestock Producers' Association. In his WLS talk he gives up-to-the-minute information on livestock, co-operative marketing, news comment and market trends.

"The radio offers a wonderful opportunity for improvement in livestock marketing because of the comparative economy of reaching large numbers of shippers quickly with market information," said Mr. Harper, in commenting on the value of the market service given the farmer by the Sears-Roebuck station. "The radio undoubtedly will be one of the most important factors in the orderly movement of livestock to market."

Ancient Civilization

East Indians have always been proud of their age-old civilization, and they believe that it is as ancient as any in Asia. Archeology has now discovered definite monumental evidence to justify their belief. Knowledge of Indian antiquities had previously extended up to 2,500 years, but now, in the light of fresh discoveries, this period is doubled, and it is apparent that 5,000 years ago the Indians were living in well-built cities and were in possession of a relatively mature civilization with a high standard of art and craftsmanship, according to a special correspondence from Bombay to the Christian Science Monitor.

"I shall skip nothing. The woman I was to have married left me the evening before, and disappeared with another man. Had he been free to marry her she would have had no need to escape in secrecy. I gave up my work. I hunted them through the Southern states. My mind was obsessed with the idea of redeeming my honor. If I had found them I should have killed him. They knew it, and they fled before me. I gave them no rest. For five years I pursued them, running down every clue."

"You'll permit me to correct your memory on that point, John," said Lawson suavely. "For five years you wandered among tramps and hoboes, to the scandal of your former friends, thinking that you were looking for your fiancee, but actually doing your searching in morphine visions. Such delusions of phenomenal activity are a recognized symptom of your disease. De Quincey imagined that he visited every corner of the earth while lying at home in an opium stupor."

"I never touched morphine until you gave it to me," said Lancaster.

"That delusion is part of your disease. No, John, you may have searched the suburban districts of Avonmouth, but you can't have gone far, because every few months you would turn up at the institute, looking shabbier and more disreputable on each occasion, and more and more morphine soaked. And every time I tried to set you up and help you. I was sorry for you, and you knew it and traded upon my pity; I was shamed by you, and you knew that and traded upon my shame."

Lancaster hung his head; Joan laid her hand lightly on his, and after that he continued to return Lawson's gaze steadfastly.

"I went to you, Jim Lawson," he said, "because I had placed you in charge of the institute when I elected to head the other branch of the trust fund, the Avonmouth hospital. I had given you the charge here because you were—"

"Your illegitimate half-brother," said Lawson bluntly. "We are not mincing our words. Because you robbed me of my own birthright as your elder brother, by reason of the fact that my mother was not legally married to our father. Yes, go on."

"At last, Joan, I was broken down completely," continued Lancaster. "It was a monomania, that search of mine, as I came to understand afterward, a perverted pride that had eaten into my heart and left no place for other thoughts. But I did not become addicted to morphine until this man urged it upon me, under the guise of medical care. And even then I could have broken off the habit at any time, but I had no heart to, and it gave me relief from thoughts that tortured me."

"So they all think," said Lawson.

"It was he who told me that I could never break it off, who urged me to continue the use of it with sophistical arguments which I had not the energy to oppose. I had been five years away from Avonmouth. The people at the Southern hospital believed me dead, and I did not undeceive them. I never meant to return. When I came here it was always by night, to this man whom I believed to be my friend, to avoid shaming our name in the eyes of Millville. Thus none ever saw us together, and Lawson and I resembled each other as much as we do today."

"More, I hope, John," sneered the other. "The life one leads tells as the years go by."

"Nobody in these parts had seen me since I was a boy. I had left home young, and studied at Johns Hopkins and abroad. Lawson had taken my name. The old neighbors had gone away, and if any of the country folks have long memories, they have close tongues, too. The matron and Jenkins are both newcomers. I had passed out of memory.

"This devil saw his chance and grasped at it," he went on with sudden vehemence. "Here was the famous Doctor Lancaster, a broken man, an outcast, and believed in Avonmouth to be long since dead. And here was the Lancaster known to Millville and Lancaster village, at the head of this institute. Why shouldn't he get me to take his place here while he went to Avonmouth and claimed to be I? Lawson was ambitious. He wanted to be something bigger than the superintendent of a little hill institute. And he wanted to get his fingers on the trust fund at Avonmouth. Do I wrong you?" he demanded, turning fiercely upon the other.

"Not in the least; you honor me," said Lawson, with a suave bow. "I wanted to take the fund out of your worthless supervision and devote it to proper uses."

"This must be stopped!" shouted Myers, with a sudden interposition. "Doctor Lancaster, you are saying things that you will regret tomorrow. You are turning to bite the hand that fed you. Where would you be today save for Doctor Lawson? A dead man in a pauper's grave!"

"He persuaded me, weakened as I was by morphine with which he had been dosing me," Lancaster resumed, without paying the least attention to the secretary. "He was to take my place in Avonmouth, while I could assume charge here, pretend to have an illness, which would account for any change in my aspect and character. Nobody would know the difference, and nobody has known the difference. Here, he told me, I could be free to brood over my unhappy life, while he, the clever schemer, taking up my past, could adapt it to his own. He convinced me."

Joan gasped as she began to understand the enormity of the crime. And it was true: she could read that truth in Lawson's face, his pride in the exploit. Lawson was actually smirking, as he had smirked in the operating theater.

"I consented, and he went away," said Lancaster. "My recollection of the months that followed is necessarily a dim one. I know, however, that I was in no state to take care of the funds. They disappeared, and I was accused of having embezzled them. If I did that I did it in my dreams.'

"That's just the trouble with you, John," said Lawson. "You dream too much. The question is, what did you do with them? Bury them? You can't have spent thirty thousand dollars upon morphine."

"I have accepted and borne the burden of the guilt," cried Lancaster. "This man Myers was placed in charge. Thereafter he was ever at my elbow, urging me upon the downward path. When I would make an effort to break off my habit he would whisper to me that my life was ruined, that the charge of embezzlement would be pressed if ever I returned to Avonmouth. He would advise me to take my drug and forget—"

"You are lying, you dreamer!" yelled the secretary. "You lie, and you know it!"

"When you came, Joan, I was all but hopeless. I had caught at your aid as my last hope, because that day you came to me your face looked good, and strong, too, and you spoke so sincerely, and it was years since I had known anyone like you. And you seemed to have been sent to me."

"Religious hallucination," said Lawson, tapping his forehead significantly. Nevertheless, Joan could see that he was growing uneasy as the plot was unraveled.

"It was a miracle, that meeting, one of those chances that seem reserved to uncover such conspiracies. For, though this man had stolen my name"—and here a touch of pride was visible on Lancaster's face—"there was one thing he could not do. He could not perform the Lancaster operation, though he had picked my brains during the weeks in which he kept me here, a prisoner in one room. And so, from time to time, he compelled me to go to Avonmouth, under the charge of Myers, in order to operate. He laid down the regulations: I was to dress and mask alone; I was to speak as little as possible and to leave hastily after I had finished my work. And he always sent me there with a full injection of the drug in my body. I was too weak to resist, too much under the thumb of Myers here."

"Doctor, won't you stop this painful recitation of hallucinations?" pleaded the secretary to Lawson. "You know, tomorrow he will retract everything."

"The day came," continued Lancaster, "when a committee of visiting surgeons was to witness the operation. He thought that he had learned it. His vanity led him to go to the hospital in person, after he had brought me to Avonmouth. The patient died, but he alone was responsible for that. And that is where you come into the case, Joan. I managed to get word with you, and Myers followed you to this institute, in order to forestall me if possible."

"Doctor Lancaster, you did not steal the funds," said Joan calmly. "Do you not see the hold these two men have managed to obtain over you? They stole the funds, and their object in drugging you was to get rid of you, the sole evidence of their crime, by your death. And so, not daring to murder you, they planned that you should commit suicide."

"You'll answer for that!" shouted the secretary, white with rage.

Lancaster shrugged his sholders. "It doesn't matter now, my dear," he said.

But he had struck Lawson through his triple hide of vanity at last.

"But that isn't all," shouted the man. "Admit that there may be a substratum of truth in these morphine dreams of yours, John Lancaster. Admit that I was ambitious, and that I did take the place my half-brother had forfeited in order to be of use to the world, and in order to save you from a felon's cell or a maniac's grave. Acknowledge that I did impersonate you tonight, as before, that I came back with Myers in order to get rid of this girl who threatened to disrupt the institute and put a drug drunkard in the office I hold. Well, what then? That isn't all the story.

"You have played your miserable game craftily, John Lancaster, after having made a fair agreement with me. But I've done my duty toward you and our father's fund, and if he were alive he would thank me for it. And as for this girl, she can go, and, if her ravings receive credence anywhere, I'll face a jury and tell the truth fearlessly.

"But you haven't explained everything to your poor dupe, John. You haven't told her where your sweetheart is. You haven't said that all the while you have been making love to her your fiancee is under this roof, hopelessly insane, that she came back in her madness, and that you took her into the institute and cared for her when her own people had discarded her, because you still loved her. And I'll tell you something, John. I brought her back; I was in touch with her from first to last; and I brought her here as an additional lure to keep you at the institute after I had gone to Avonmouth. Just tell Miss Wentworth who Mrs. Dana is."

Joan's eyes met Lancaster's, and she saw in his the supreme moment of his anguish. She braced herself to meet the shock; she told herself that Lancaster no longer cared for his poor charge. She faced Lawson and Myers unflinchingly. But the spring of hope that had been bubbling in her heart seemed to have gone dry.

Lawson seemed to be animated by some infernal deviltry. He seemed to be throwing off the mask he had assumed; he leaned forward and shook his finger in Lancaster's face.

"And there's another thing, John," he said. "You remember that when we were boys together I resented the difference between your position and mine. Because of a few written words upon a legal document you, the younger, were the honored heir of John Lancaster, Sr., living in the big house on the estate, while I was the unacknowledged child, the shame of my poor mother, ostracized even by the meaner whites of the district. Your friends pretended not to know who I was when they rode by."

Lancaster made a gesture of deprecation as Lawson's voice shook with passion. "That's true, Jim," he said, "but can you blame me? Did I not give you the position here?"

"I hated you because of that, John," resumed Lawson. "I hated you, and I vowed some day to turn the tables on you. I wanted to be a surgeon. What a struggle I had, working my way through Johns Hopkins, while you were spending your father's money there! The struggle soured me, John. And once, do you remember, I was operating on a rabbit under curare, which had paralyzed the motor nerves and left the beast to suffer? It was an experiment such as I had often thought I should like to make on you, and you flung a vile word at me and killed the creature. I told you then that I would get even with you some day. The time arrived. I got my own back, and more, but there is one thing that I never told you. Your fiancee was the victim of a misunderstanding. There was no other man."

John Lancaster's deep breathing seemed the only sound in the room; and, as if galvanized into full strength, he stood now like a panther, poised for a leap, every muscle grown taut, and his eyes gleaming. Joan, paralyzed by the sudden unleashing of Lawson's venomous revenge, could not utter a word.

Lancaster spoke. "You said you were in touch with her and brought her here after she became insane," he said. "How did you do it?"

"You have had your full say, John Lancaster," replied Lawson, "and now I am going to have mine. Under the delusion that your intention was to elope with her, on the day before that fixed for the marriage in the parish church—a romantic plan to evade the family and curious neighbors—Miss Reid went to Savannah, to meet you there. I needn't go into details of the trap that your unacknowledged enemy set for you, but when she learned that she had been tricked it was too late to return. Her life was ruined, John; and it was I, impersonating you, who sent her there."

Americans Accorded Honors by Britain

The first native American to be knighted by an English monarch was Sir William Pepperell, who was born in Kittery, Maine, June 27, 1696. His father was a Welshman who came to New England as an apprentice to a fisherman. The son became a merchant and amassed a large fortune. As a military leader he took part in several conflicts with the Indians and attained much distinction. For thirty-two years he was a member of the royal council of Massachusetts, and as chief justice of common pleas he won eminence as a jurist.

Since Pepperell's time many Americans have achieved knighthood and higher British honors, Lord Astor and Lord Shaughnessy, the former a native of New York and the latter of Milwaukee, being among the more prominent latter-day examples.

Easy to Lose Way in British Guiana Bush

British Guiana bush is a dangerous maze. Savages find their way by means of secret marks, but a tenderfoot enters at great risk. The country is five times the size of England, and there are not more than ten white men who have gone into the wilds of the interior, according to D. Bannerman Clarke, M. A., general manager of the Aranka Gold, Ltd., of Georgetown, British Guiana. "The natives," he says, "have the most marvelous sense of direction and find their way through the jungle with unerring precision. They have a sort of sign language. They make marks on trees which only they understand, and if some one has followed the natives he can always tell how large the party was, whither they went and just when they passed the given spot, by these curious marks on the trees made with cutlasses. They also leave marks for their own guidance when they turn about and start homeward. Once you know the bush and its hidden sign language it is almost as easy to get about as in the open, but if a tenderfoot gets lost he is in a hopeless maze and has very little chance of getting out alive.

MRS. URQUHART GETS REWARD

Mrs. Urquhart of Omaha wants every housewife to share her good fortune in possessing a handsome reward. Here is what she says: "This is the way I did it. I answered an ad by writing for a free 10c bottle of Liquid Veneer and I found it so wonderful for dusting and polishing that I told fifteen of my friends about it and the makers sent me entirely free and postpaid, a great big, beautiful $2.00 Liquid Veneer Polishing Mop." Then Mrs. Urquhart goes on to say: "I am very proud and pleased with the reward given for what I have done, so will take great pleasure in showing it to friends."

Twenty thousand of these $2.00 Mops are going to be given away to housewives. Write for a free 10c bottle and ask for descriptive circular 15 telling how easily you, too, may have one of these mops. Address Liquid Veneer Company, Dept. L, Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says: "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. and inclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

During that time he estimates he saved $3,250 on 13,000 meals, but would like to have some one tell him where the money is.

It is serious to be minus, but the moment you increase the number of your red-blood-cells, you begin to become plus. That's why S. S. S., since 1826, has meant to thousands of underweight men and women, a plus in their strength. Your body fills to the point of power, your flesh becomes firmer, the age lines that come from thinness disappear. You look younger, firmer, happier, and you feel it, too, all over your body. Planes Versatile

Every air-mail plane that flies over San Francisco bay and the high Sierras between the Golden Gate and Reno, Nev., has to be ready for two emergencies. One is a dip in the ocean and another is a forced landing in the snow-capped mountains. So every plane carries snowshoes and life preservers as part of the equipment.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

He Got There

Several years ago we had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of a real live artist in the person of Ernest Harrison Barnes of Hillsdale who has already made his mark in the world. Mr. Barnes was a student under the German artist, Professor George Gardner of Hillsdale College and we believe graduated in 1897 from that institution. He has followed the profession and is an instructor at the U of M. From the Hillsdale Collegian we clip the following article.

"Tryon, "an unspoiled paradise" in western North Carolina, has a live Chamber of Commerce which has recently published a souvenir booklet explaining the town's scenic and climatic advantages. A most enchanting reproduction of a painting on the cover of this book impels one to seek the author inside, where appears the advice, "The painting reproduced on the cover of this phamphlet is the work of Mr. Ernest H. Barnes one of the several artists who regula-ly came to Tryon, which offers all the year 'round a challenge to any artist's brush.

Ernest Barnes made his home in Hillsdale for a number of years. He received his master of Arts in June, 1923 by his Alma Mater. He has been winning a number of prizes and laurels in exhibits in the East, and that the succession of honors has long been richly deserved no one acquainted with Mr Barnes' work can doubt"

Sex Of Egg Cannot Be Told By Its Form Institute Finds

The sex of the chick to come cannot be foretold by the shape of the egg, says a statment of the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The statement intended to correct an impression current among many that round eggs will consistently hatch pullets and extra long eggs a greater proportion of cockerels.

While neither a "sex detector" nor the formation of the egg is a true guide to the sex of the embryo chick, it is possible to distinguish male and female chicks immediately after hatching if certain breeds are crossed, the Institute statement continues. This is known as the sex linked characteristic principle which enables identification of male and female chicks resulting from the mating of males of certain breeds with females of certain other breeds. Just as the color blindness of the father among humans is transmitted only to his daughters and by these in turn only to their sons, in poultry breeding with certain colored breeds some principle of heredity makes it possible to know the sex of the chicks by the color of their downy coats.

"When a Buff Plymouth Rock male is mated with a Barred Plymouth Rock female, all the pullets from such a mating will be buff and all the sons barred," the Institute's statement says. "In other words, the daughters inherit the father's buff color and all the sons the mother's barred pattern. From this mating, hatching time will find approximately half the chicks buff and the other half dark, the buff chicks being all females and the dark ones all males. The pullets can then be retained for egg production and in most cases they will be found to be especially strong and vigorous. But under no circumstances should such cross bred poultry be used by breeders; only purebreds should be used to make the crosses."

The Whiskered colony at Benton Harbor known as the House of David has again jumped into the limelight. It is the intention of the Michigan Historical and Pioneer Society to visit this institution during its convention in the above city June 3, 4 and 5 1925. The Society goes on to say: "A score of years ago the founder of—this sect Benjamin Purnell, trudged over the unpaved streets of Benton Harbor behind a rickety push cart containing all his belongings- To-day the House of David has 900 members, owns thoustnds of acres of fertile farming lanes and a big hotel in the city."

On Saturday a couple of hobo boys seemingly from Detroit came meandering along through this section of the township. The culprits had already started down the railroad track toward Hillsdale when they were held up and arrested by Deputy Chester Alpaugh. Alpaugh took his charges to Hillsdale jail and searched them, $20 in United States lucre, a bill fold containing the picture of a Detroit motor cycle cop known to Mr. Alpaugh were found. Some questioning of the lads followed. They gave their names as Alden and Jack Malone but it was at once apparent they were alases. The boys claimed to have come from New York partly by boat and partly by rail to Detroit. Notification of Detroit officers was welcomed and police at once came to Hillsdale and took charge of the prisoners stating they were wanted for larceny

State Needs More Cow Test Workers

Continuing rapid growth of cow testing associations in Michigan has brought about a shortage of trained testers, according to Prof. O. E. Reed, head of the dairy department at the M. A. C.

With more than 100 associations active in the state, or 15 percent of all those in the United States, the demand has exceeded the supply of m[illegible] to handle the cow testing work in nearly a dozen new groups being held up temporarily waiting the assignment of testers.

Men with practical experience in dairy work, especially along feeding lines, frequently qualify for the association management positions. The Dairy Department at M. A. C. is said to be anxious to get in touch with men who are interested in this field of work.

Conditioning the Farm Horse

Thousands of farm horses have been idle or roughing it during the winter months and are not ready for hard, steady work. It is now the season when the program of many a farm horse is suddenly changed without the preparation that is necessary for efficient service.

On many farms the horses have obtained their winter feed from stalk fields and the straw stack. They come through in a thin condition and need to be put in better flesh before ready for hard work. This is best done by gradually giving the horses in advance a portion of the same ration that is to be fed during the work season.

Whether the horse has been out in the open or standing idly in the barn, a moderate amount of light work preceding the rush season is advisable. The hardening process may be accomplished by changing horses each half day in doing the necessary hauling about the farm preparatory to working in the fields. This will exercise and strengthen the muscles without tiring them.

The horse will not perform efficiently in an ill-fitting harness. The raw sores that develop are due, in most instances, to plunging an idle horse suddenly into heavy work or to the fact that the harness is not properly adjusted. It is especially important that the horse collar be of the right kind, shape and size. A well-fitted collar does not choke and distributes the draft over the entire shoulder.

During the winter months most farm horses are groomed very little and the long hair of the winter coats is a handicap when spring comes. It is best to remove the old hair at once, by clipping. This is important as it increases the efficiency of the horse. It prevents the extreme sweating and lathering that would otherwise take place as the heavy work goes on and the weather becomes warm.

Due to the fact that the direct farm income is mainly from cattle, hogs, or sheep, the care of the farm horse and mule is generally neglected. It should be remembered that the income from the other classes of live stock depends upon the crops that the farm produces; and the horse furnishes the power that makes farm operations possible. More care for the work horse will in the end effect a saving and increase the efficiency on many farms. Be fair to the horse, by doing the things that will give him a good chance to give his best during the present season.

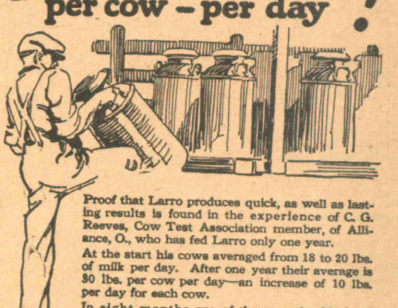
10 lbs. more per cow – per day!



Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

The idea was carried out at the suggestion of the Rotary Club which sponsored Boys' Week. The boys thoroughly enjoyed the experience.

Transfer of the Flint Baseball club of the Michigan-Ontario Baseball league from Otto H. Powell to a group of business men, represented by Thomas J Halligan, president of the league. Suitable financial arrangements were made whereby the club will become the property of Flint citizens. A large down payment was made, and the last installment will come with the close of the season. Sixteen players and all equipment at the park and of the team were included in the deal.

High school attendance at Gladstone was reduced about 75 per cent when the girls staged a walkout in protest against a faculty order forbidding them to wear rolled stockings. The boys of the high school were already on strike, because the faculty ordered them to wear neckties or stay away. They paraded without ties through Gladstone, Munising and Escanabe, on foot and in automobiles, their necks adorned with red kerchiefs. They shouted defiance at school officials.

The last government office in Michigan has been closed, it was announced by George C. Jackman, register of the office at Marquette. Three tons of records of the office which was opened late in the 'fifties, have been forwarded to Washington where Michigan residents will transact business in the future. The Marquette land office has been the only one in Michigan since a fire in 1888 destroyed the office in Grayling. Records that were saved from the fire were transfered to Marquette.

Western Michigan is planting an increased acreage of early potatoes this spring, according to reports from counties in the potato producing regions. Reports from Montcalm county are to the effect that more early potatoes are being planted in April than ever before. Although this is due, in part, to the early season, growers are said to be anxious to have more spuds ready for market late in the summer.

Announcement of the proposed car transfer of the enclosed car plant of the Buick Motor company from Detroit to Flint was made by Harry H. Bassett, president and general manager. The consolidation of the Buick factories in this city will mean an increase in the production schedule of about 250 cars daily and the employment of more Flint workers, the announcement indicated.

The Ford Motor Co. air transport line between the Ford plants in Detroit and Chicago, which was established two weeks ago has begun to operate on a schedule of daily round trips. Hitherto the line had operated on a schedule of round trips on alternate days. Daily flights were made possible by the delivery of a second plane, the "Maiden Dearborn II."

Holland Post of the American Legion will extend their tree planting opeartions, begun las year when they planted 200 trees along the highways leading into Holland. A campaign for funds to carry out a similar program this year is already under way and with the raising of the necessary resources the setting of the trees will start.

One of the most active clean-up campigns the city has known is predicted for Mt Clemens this year by the city commissioner following the success of the parade of school children in behalf of the campaign here. Nearly 2,000 students, carrying banners with clean-up slogans, marched through the down town streets.

The plant and building of the St. Clair Republican, a weekly, which has been published for many years, has been practically destroyed by fire. R. D. Harmer, editor and publisher, places his loss at $12,000, partially covered by insurance. Mr. Harmer is undecided as to his plans for the future.

A deposit of 2,500,000 tons of Fullers Earth, valued at $13 a ton, will be taken from the ground on the Harrietta property, near Cadillac, according to an announcement made by J. W. Evans, Cleveland chemist, who has organized the Michigan Fuller's Earth Corporation to exploit the project.

At a special school election at Charlotte, the proposed bond issue $350,000 for a new high school was defeated 890 to 233.

Nathan F. Simpson, 63 years old, manager of the Michigan State prison industries and a former warden of that institution died in a hospital at Jackson of a ruptured appendix.

Holland chick shipment records for the season were broken when nearly 100,000 chicks were shipped via parcel post from the postoffice. The chicks were shipped from 48 hatcheries in this vicinity to all parts of the United States and Canada.

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Governor Entertains Legislators With Harmony Dinner At Country Club

Lansing—Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck has reversed himself in the matter of entertaining as chief executive of the State. At each of his three inaugurals he cut out the customary festivities, simply taking the oath of office New Year's Day, then starting work for the two-year term. No inaugural balls or formal receptions. The reversal of his policy was when he had all the members of the Senate and House, and their wives and other women of their families, also many State officials and their wives and legislative clerks, altogether about 300, at a dinner at the Lansing Country Club.

It was a strictly informal affair; no dress suits or tuxedos. Just the ordinary everyday attire that the senators and representatives wore in their daily occupation for the past four months of passing or killing bills. The Governor made a three-minute talk, in the course of which he complimented the members of both houses for the harmony that provided and the constructive work done during the session.

State Tax Levy Increased

The state tax levy for the coming two years will be somewhere between sixteen and twenty millions annually. The levy last year was fourteen and a half million dollars.

From figures obtained from the senate finance committee, it appears that appropriation bills will total $59,000 000 for the next two years.

From the corporation tax and other revenue sources aside from the annual state tax going into the general fund, the state will receive nine and a half million dollars a year, it is conservatively estimated. This reduces the tax levy to $20,000,000 yearly.

Further reductions are expected when Governor Alex J. Groesbeck applies the veto to a million or so of the appropriations, as it is reported that he will do. This and the possibility of the corporation tax and other fees going close to $12,500,000 mark, will place the state levy somewhere near $16,500,000 a year, it is believed by several of the committee members.

Condemnation Bill Passed

The Atwood condemnation bill, stripped of its most radical features by a half-dozen amendments, was passed on general orders. The bill was buried in the house judiciary committee after several attacks were aimed at its radical departure from usual condemnation practices. But the governor wanted it passed to expedite condemnation proceedings along Woodward avenue, where a wider highway from Pontiac to Detroit is being constructed. The committee was urged by word from the executive office to release the bill.

City Advertising Limited

The Senate passed the Woodruff Bill to permit the common councils of cities to spend not more than $50,000 a year for advertising their city. As introduced, the bill called for a straight four mill tax, which would have meant that the Detroit Council could have authorized the spending of about $9,800,000 a year in advertising. The limit of $50,000 was imposed in committee.

Increase State Normal Funds

Vastly increased appropriations for the maintenance and operation of the four State normal colleges agreed to by the Legislature. The House adopted the report of a conference committee, appointed to settle House and Senate differences on the appropriations, authorizing increases totaling more than $500,000 over the grants made by the 1923 assembly.

Solons' Pay Raise Passes

The senate by unanimous vote passed the Palmer joint resolution calling for the submission of a constitutional amendment to the people raising the legislator's pay from $800 to $1,200 a term. This amendment will be submitted at the November 1926 election as the resolution had previously passed the house.

Senate Passes Flogging Bill

The Wood Whipping Post Bill, providing for the flogging of men convicted of robbery while armed, was passed by the Senate by a vote of 17 to 12, the smallest majority the bill could receive and still pass. It has gone to the House. Prospects for its passage there are not bright.

Anti-Bribe Bill Introduced

Representative Fred Ming, of Cheboygan, introduced a new bill in the house of representatives. It will be the last this session, aside from probably a few strictly facetious, that are expected customarily on the last day of the session. It masqueraded under the title of an anti-bribe bill. In introducing it, Ming simply made a gesture of reprimand toward suspicions that have been whispered that some members had been guilty of unethical conduct. There is not sufficient time left in which to pass it.

Appropriate College Funds

The University of Michigan and Agriculture College Appropriation Bills were passed by the Senate, carrying a total appropriation for the two schools of $3,616,000. The money is to be spent in the next two years and is exclusive of maintenance costs. The University of Michigan bill calls for $1,800,000 and includes $900,000 for a new museum, $400,000 for a building for the college of architecture and $500,000 for land. The Michigan Agricultural College Bill appropriates $1,041,000 for building improvements.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

How the World Regards the Election of Hindenburg as German President.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

FIELD MARSHAL PAUL VON HINDENBURG, candidate of the Monarchists and Nationalists, leader of Germany's defeated armies in the World war and devoted servant of the former kaiser, was elected President of Germany with a plurality of approximately 900,00 votes over Wilhelm Marx. This bare statement may sound a bit startling, but probably there is nothing in the fact that should cause great alarm among nations that desire peace. Hindenburg's declared policies are not different from those of Marx, and since the election Chancellor Luther, who will remain in power, has put forth statements designed to reassure the world. Said Dr. Luther:

"Germany in her disarmed condition is justified in demanding security. It is all the more to the interest of Germany to seek protection through treaties against future attacks, since she does not wish to wage war, and as every expert knows she is unable to wage war.

"Germany will co-operate in the removal of continued international tension. Our attitude is so clear and distinct that there cannot be any doubt regarding our aims. It goes without saying that the stand taken by the German government remains unchanged."

This means that Germany is adopting a stiffer attitude toward the allies that defeated her in the war and will not agree to a one-sided security pact which guarantees the frontiers of other nations but leaves her own open to attack. She demands assurance that France will not seize the Rhineland. Dr. Luther also spoke some firm words concerning the failure of the allies to evacuate Cologne, saying:

"During more than three and a half months we have waited vainly for a substantial justification of non-evacuation. This justification, though constantly announced to us in the allied notes, has not yet reached us. The German government has repeatedly said in public statements and diplomatic communications that it is absolutely out of the question that reprisals be imposed upon a nation because of a partial nonfulfillment of a treaty while at the same time that same nation is deprived of the possibility of explaining itself and of the possibility for objective discussion. We must definitely expect that the allied governments no longer will delay in putting an end to this state of affairs."

Many of General von Hindenburg's backers are opposed to the Dawes plan and he has not yet committed himself concerning it, but Chancellor Luther praised the plan warmly, declaring it was responsible for the stabilization of German currency and for the start on reconstruction work. The Monarchist press already has begun a campaign against the carrying out of the Dawes plan, but the government officials doubtless realize that to repudiate it would mean financial collapse.

FOREIGN governments generally were not especially disturbed by Von Hindenburg's victory, even that of France feeling that his policies were no more inimical than those of Marx, who had demanded revision of the eastern frontiers and union with Austria and had declared that further disarmament of Germany was impossible. The French people, however, feel their suspicions of Germany's intentions are justified by the election results and that the United States and Great Britain must now cease interfering with France's plans for self-protection. In England, Italy, Japan, Holland and Rumania the comments of the press showed the people were not at all pleased with Germany's choice of a chief magistrate but there was little fear expressed that it meant an early return of the monarchy. The Russian communists declared the danger of a new war was increased. Poland alone was really satisfied, believing there was now no need to fear that the western powers would sacrifice Poland for a guarantee treaty securing the western frontiers.

Washington of course had nothing to say officially, but no one would admit seeing cause for alarm. The present situation with respect to loans to German industries will not be disturbed, it was pointed out in an authoritative source, since both German and American bankers reached the conclusion some weeks ago that further extensive borrowing in the United States by German industries was unsound and have sought to discourage it, the fear being that if such borrowing continued, it would complicate, if not render impossible, the payment of Germany's reparation obligations.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, chancellor of the exchequer, offering to parliament the British budget for the coming year, made the welcome announcement that Great Britain was back on a gold standard. He said the law forbidding the export of gold would be continued until the end of the year but would not be renewed, and meanwhile the Bank of England would be given a special license to export. Most of the rest of the world, Mr. Churchill announced, was following the example of Great Britain and the United States. The currencies of Sweden, Austria and Hungary are based on sterling, which now has become gold. Holland, the Dutch Indies, Australia and New Zealand acted simultaneously with Great Britain. Canada already is on a gold basis and South Africa reverts to it on July 1. American financiers and government officials received the news of Great Britain's action with enthusiasm, describing it as one of the most important steps toward reconstruction taken since the Dawes plan was put in operation.

OUR great war game in the Pacific came to an end early in the week and the chief umpires, Rear Admiral Coontz and Major General Hines, decided that the Blue forces had defeated the Black and had captured the Hawaiian islands. It was demonstrated that the islands cannot be defended against attack by a first rate power except by the big guns of the fleet. When the Blue warships attacked Oahu the numerous airplanes of the defenders demonstrated their great value for scouting duty, but not a single battleship was "destroyed" by them. The Black planes attempted to put the airplane carrier Langley out of action but she escaped. The aviation units of both forces caused considerable damage. While feint attacks and diversions were made on the west and south coasts of Oahu, several battleships swept the north coast with shell fire and a party of marines landed, despite the efforts of the defenders. Details of just what was accomplished must await the statement of the chief umpires after they have heard the contentions of the various commanders and digested their arguments. The outcome of any particular phase of the "battle" in the Pacific, says Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, was not the primary object in holding the exercises; if the United States fleet has shown that it can function smoothly and satisfactorily as a single unit under one supreme command and under approximate war conditions, the maneuvers have been fully justified.

One correspondent with the fleet calls attention to the fact that the Japanese navy tanker Hyatoma, carrying navy officers and midshipmen, followed our fleet all the way from San Pedro to Honolulu and probably sent to Tokyo accurate reports of the maneuvers.

WILLIAM S. CULBERTSON of Kansas, who has been vice chairman of the federal tariff commission, has been appointed minister to Rumania to succeed Peter A. Jay, promoted to be ambassador to Argentina. However, because of conditions in the Near East and Washington's recent demand that Rumania arrange her debt to this country, Mr. Jay will not at once leave Bukharest.

THE first distinguished service medals ever given for military services performed in time of peace were pinned last week on the breasts of Maj. Frederick L. Martin, first commander of the army world flight expedition, and First Lieuts. Leigh Wade and Leslie P. Arnold, members of the expedition. The other men of the group that made the world flight also will receive the medals, which were awarded by special act of congress.

JAMES M. BECK'S resignation as attorney general has just been accepted by President Coolidge. Among those said to be under consideration for the place are William D. Mitchell of St. Paul, Minn., and Charles W. Waterman of Denver, who managed the Coolidge preconvention campaign in Colorado. Former Representative Harry E. Hull of Iowa has been recommended for the position of assistant secretary of labor to succeed E. J. Henning, who has been given a federal judgeship in southern California.

IN A MANIFESTO the Agrarian party of Bulgaria, or peasants' union, has denied any connivance in or sympathy with the attempt on the life of King Boris and the bomb outrage in the cathedral. It denounces these acts vigorously and declares they were perpetrated by individuals "tempted by Moscow gold." The party admits that among the exiled Agrarians and former members of the party were some who were implicated in the crimes but refuses to accept responsibility for their acts. The leaders of the party, who were arrested immediately after the cathedral explosion, have been released. The police are running down and capturing or killing the ringleaders in the outrages one after another. The Labor members of the British parliament who accused the Bulgarian government of ruthless slaughter of suspects have returned from Sofia to London and repeated their charges. One of them adds that nearly every government in Europe is about to start a round-up and expulsion of Reds.

In the chief cities of Europe the authorities kept close watch to prevent Communist outbreaks on May 1, and in some of them, notably in Italy, numerous arrests were made and all parades and demonstrations were forbidden.

Already the Persian government has begun a cleaning up of the bolshevik agents who have been operating there. When one leader of intrigues was arrested the soviet legation in Teheran locked his papers in its vault. The police cracked the safe despite the angry protests of the Russians.

MISS MARY MacSWINEY, rabid Irish Republican and foe of England, has been lecturing in the United States for some weeks and gathering funds for her pet plan. Someone told the State department that she has no passport and inquiries were started. Interviewed in Chicago, Miss MacSwiney characteristically said she not only had no passport, but she did not need any and had no intention of ever getting any. She added that if she were arrested she would start a hunger strike. Immigration officials in Washington said if Miss MacSwiney had no passport her presence in the country was illegal and she might be deported.

ORVILLE WRIGHT announces that the original Wright airplane, which made the first successful flight on December 17, 1903, has been presented by him to the Times museum in South Kensington, England. Several museums in this country, he says, offered to take it, but only one of them was national in character and he would not trust the historic machine to that institution because it had permitted the Langley machine of 1903 to be taken out and mutilated for the purposes of private parties to a patent litigation. Therefore the priceless relic built by the Wright brothers is to be lost to the United States.

IN THE eastern part of the country, especially in Washington, there is a smallpox scare of considerable proportions. All government employees in the capital were asked to submit to vaccination, and it was reported that President Coolidge was one of the first to undergo the operation. Other cities where the dread disease was prevalent were Birmingham, Ala.; Richmond, Va., and Philadelphia. Further west only Milwaukee reported many cases. In New York and Chicago conditions in this respect were normal.

SIR EYRE CROWE, British permanent undersecretary for foreign affairs, is dead in London. He held that post of very high responsibility for years and was widely known and greatly respected.

Many Colleges Now Own Rail Securities

Washington.—Nearly 28 per cent of all the income-producing endowments of the principal colleges, universities and technical schools in the country is invested in steam railway stocks and bonds, according to an announcement made by the bureau of railway economics.

This conclusion is based upon a tabulation of replies received from sixty-five of the foremost endowed educational institutions in response to a questionnaire recently sent to them by the bureau.

The bureau stated that the value of the productive investments of the sixty-five institutions was $531,696,697. Of that amount, $148,270,933, or 27.9 per cent, is invested in steam railway securities. Investments in steam railway bonds by these colleges are $129,150,352, while investments in railway stocks amount to $19,120,581.

Leland Stanford university of California ranks first in the amount invested in railway securities. Of its total productive investment, $13,907,000, or 49.8 per cent, represents investments in railway securities. Harvard university with $13,681,396, or 31.8 per cent, ranks second; Yale, with $12,536,411, or 33.8 per cent, is third; University of Chicago, fourth, and Johns Hopkins university, with $10,156,904, or 53.8 per cent, is fifth.

Of the $52,695,357 in productive investments that have been made by Columbia university, $8,966,550, or 17 per cent, is in railroad securities.

AFTER HER BABY CAME

Mrs. Hollister Unable To Do Her Work for Six Months

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health

MRS. HENRY HOLLISTER
WYANDOTTE, MICHIGAN

Wyandotte, Michigan.—"After my baby was born I did not do my own work for six months and could hardly take care of my own baby. I always had a pain in my right side and it was so bad I was getting round shoulders. I would feel well one day and then feel so bad for three or four days that I would be in bed. One Sunday my mother came to see how I was, and she said a friend told her to tell me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. So the next day I got a bottle and before it was half taken I got relief. After I was well again I went to the doctor and he asked me how I was getting along. I told him I was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and he said it did not hurt any one to take it. I am always recommending the Vegetable Compound to others and I always have a bottle of it on hand."—Mrs. HENRY HOLLISTER, R. F. D. No. 1, Box 7, Wyandotte, Michigan.

Another Woman's Case

St. Paul, Minnesota.—"I have a little girl three years old and ever since her birth I have suffered with my back as if it were breaking in two, and bearing-down pains all the time. I also had dizzy spells. I had read several letters of women in the newspapers, and the druggist recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to my husband for me. As a result of taking it my back has stopped aching and the awful bearing-down feeling is gone. I feel stronger and do all of my housework and tend to my little girl. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills for constipation. I have recommended these medicines to some of my friends and you may use this letter as a testimonial if you wish. I will be pleased to answer letters of other women if I can help them by telling them what this medicine has done for me."—Mrs. PRICE, 147 West Summit Avenue, St. Paul, Minnesota.

Blind "Guide" to Paris

A blind man, well dressed and wearing an overcoat of smart cut, has been observed recently standing in front of one of the big Paris hotels. A copper plate, suspended by a slender chain from his neck, bears the following inscription in English: "The blind man speaks both English and French." The man sells postcards and maps of Paris and acts as an information bureau for the numerous Anglo-Saxons who visit the capital. For remuneration he accepts only French currency, refusing shillings and dollars.—From Le Figaro, Paris.

It is a fact, that the First Church organized, was composed of Baptist believers. Matt. 10:1; 16:16; 5. It is a fact, that the 3000 Converts of the day of Pentecost, all joined the Baptist church which Christ organized. Acts 2:41, etc,

6. It is a fact, that Paul the Apostle, was a Baptist. Rom. 6:4, 7. It is a fact, that the Apostles taught that every church member should be a regenerated person. Acts 2:37. 8. It is a fact, that each member was buried with Christ in baptism. Rom. 6:2. 9. It is a fact, that no believer was received for six months, nor was the Prodigal Son kept in the wood-shed a few months before being invited into the house. But each believer was taken into full membership as soon as he believed and had been baptized. Acts 2:41-47.

10. It is a fact, all members of the church were on an equality before God and each other. Acts 2:44 11, It is a fact, that they had a republican form of Government. Acts 1:23-26. 12. It is a fact, that the word of God was their only rule of faith and practice. Acts 26:22, 23. 13. Then, is it not a fact, that such a New Testament church should be the home of every believer in Jesus? Acts 2:47, last part of the verse.—George Fullerton.

The Military Training Camp A Winner

The Commanding General of the Department of Illinois Michigan and Wisconsin informs us that the registration for military training camps by young men of the country greatly exceeds that of last year, and the total enrollment for this season in this district so far is 19,500 and the entire quota will be filled by May 20, 1925. In view of the military necessities of the country it is indeed encouraging to the commandant to know so much interest is being taken in the movement for the physical betterment of the youth of this district, and by the way of a great uplift to our government which expects to become a military machine eventually. We are a little cocky concerning Germany's downfall which we ascribe to militant teachings but does it not seem we are slipping? The efforts to make the United States of America a land of bristling bayonets don't meet with the approval cf mothers who produce the cannon fodder and it never will. One mother said to us last season: "Well, we feel just delighted to send our son over to Battle Creek where he can come under military discipline. Its going to make a man of him right speedily and it certainly will put on polish never attained by remaining in isolated country towns" and the poor deluded woman meant just what she said. There was one instance Uncle Sam put something over a mother and codded her shamefully. Uncle Sam don't care a tinkers continental about polishing or touching up the styles and habits of your son Madam, but he does desire a fresh supply of cannon fodder and he is getting it, you can bet!

When we were a lad of fifteen the glory and glamour of war's trappings appealed to us with a mighty force. We read the story of the charge up Lookout Mountain and Sheridan's Ride from Winchester and Farragut's fight at Mobile with a devouring interest. We stood hours studying the masterpieces of paintings in the museum depicting the slaughter of battle hoping some day to be able to wear the stripes on the arm and the shoulder straps. The death and destruction of war had escaped our notice, but after passing the period of two great wars and learning the awful carnage in Flanders Fields the dull drab of the khaki unsurped all the glitter of gold cord and brass buttons and we have decided that war is even more than what Sherman called it. Woodrow Wilson caught the right idea at once when he sought to form a League of Nations but how the American Senate did kick his dog around! Did you ever ponder how many millionaires were holding down seats in the United States Senate at Washington and how they got their wealth? Well, you had better read how some of these men posed as stockholders in some of the largest firms in the world eugaged in the manufacture of munitions of war as for instance the Dupont Nemours Powder Co. and scores of others less notable, making millions in dividend for the owners while the war lasted. Henry Ford that man of mystery over at Dearborn, at one time wanted to keep this nation out of war—and spent literal oceans of money to equip a peace ship—and yet are we entirely satisfied as to his motives? It might have been a little more lucrative for Henry's business to keep the dove of peace hovering around the flag. When he found war was inevitable Mr. Ford at once became a foremost manufacturer of munitions with contracts of immense limit. Henry made a little stake out of the World war. Oh yes! But he had a large concourse of close seconds in the war game. No mothers, as long as this nation stands you will furnish cannon timber, but you can watch and wait—pray if you want to—only don't presume you have muzzled all the dogs of war.

The St Lawrence Waterway

The state of Michigan will undoubtedly miss Senator Townsend very seriously from the United States senate, and while there are scores of other good men in that august body, none as yet have ever manifested the interest in our great international question viz: Great Lakes to Ocean Waterway. They tell us that ways and means are being devised in both America and Canada to push this project to completion, and we do most sincerely hope the truth is told. Up to a year ago the powers of state in Canada were not strong for the canal, being as we supposed influenced by individual jealousy. fearing that we on this side of the border might receive the largest benefits.

When the day arrives that Detroit and Chicago will be practically on the coast of the Atlantic (and we hope that day is near) then it will be time to sit up and take notice for old Michigan will come unto her own. Of the five great central states Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin and Illinois which border the great inland seas, none will be prouder of that or more ready to give acclaim to the day when we dedicate this water route than the Wolverine state. Chicago with its great western connections by rail will undoubtedly become a gateway, and its resources from the west will tend to mushroom growth but our own Detroit with its miles of dockage right on the main route can never be excelled as a port. Great terminals would soon take shape, docks would stretch for miles along the river below Rouge and the Henry Ford smelters. Already Mr. Ford with his supernatural foresight has prepared his facilities to take care of such an arrangement by means of his privately owned freighters on the Lakes. Two mammoth modern electrical operated barges capable of crossing the Atlantic to foreign ports are in use at present bringing ore and timber from the northern peninsula. Aerial transport is now in full daily operation from Detroit to Chicago and great changes are being inaugurated almost over night along the Lake front. When the ocean traffic can tie up at Detroit docks we shall see a terrific boom and a word to the wise is sufficient in regard to investments in the city. Nothing in the Grand River Avenue or Rouge district of Detroit can go wrong. We believe both Canada and this nation are beginning to see a great bonanza which would accrue from an ocean route. With both mind and heart fixed on this project its completion will be a matter of only a few years.

Certified Potato Seed Men To Meet

Members of the Michigan Certified Seed Potato Growers Association, a cooperative group of farmers raising seed stocks under inspection, will be held at Cadillac on Friday, June 12, according to announcement made here this week by J. W. Weston, extension specialist at M. A. C. and corresponding secretary of the association.

An educational program will supplement the business sessions of the annual meeting, it is said. Minor changes in the by-laws of the organization, details of the five year contract plan for distribution of the certified potato seed stock, and a report of the pool for the past season will be among outstanding transactions at the meeting.

The Certified Seed Potato Growers Association and the Michigan Potato Producers Association are the two farmers' groups producing seed tubers under an inspection system carried out by the extension division at the state college. A committee, headed by H. C. Rather, secretary of the Michigan Crop Improvement Association, was recently appointed to head all potato inspection and certification for the state. As a result of the proved worth of the certified tubers, a marked increase in the quality of potato seed planted in the state is said to be apparent.

Honest Enforcement Of Law

This article was written by Theodore Roosevelt in New York City in 1895. He was Police Commissioner at that time.

"If there is one plain duty for the average citizen, it is to obey the law; and if there is one paramount duty for public officials, it is to enforce the law. These two propositions seem to be self evident.

"Trouble has arisen over the course of the present Board of Police Commissioners of New York in enforcing various laws rigidly and with impartiality. The law of the state of New York is that all liquor saloons shall be shut on Sunday. This applies as much to New York City as to any other part of the state. In New York City, however, there is a very large proportion of the population, notably among people of foreign birth or parentage, who wish to drink liquor on Sundays. Many of these are entirely honest and respectable people, who only wish to behave as their forefathers have behaved for generations in the Old World. Many, however, are lawless and disorderly; and the worst type of native American is invariably the drinking man who frequents saloons. Over and against these men there is a large body of people fully in sympathy with the general Americen sentiment; that is, with the sentiment of the average American country district, which is against opening the saloons on Sunday.

"Those who believe in Sunday opening always insist that there is a great majority of the people of New York City on their side. Whether this is so or not, I cannot say, and no one can with absolute certainty. One thing, however is certain,—a far larger proportion of the voters than has ever been conceded by the friends of the saloo keepers are unquestionably in favor of closing the saloons on Sunday. The sentiment for which these people stand has hitherto been rather vague and formless, for the very reason that these people have hitherto themselves been deceived by incessant statements that the law could not be enforced. One of the commonplaces of our latter day politics has been this incessant reiteration that no severe excise law could be enforced in New York City.

"When the present Board of Police Commissioners approached the subject, we were met with this statement on every hand. It was made sometimes as a warning, sometimes as a threat, and sometimes with a note of despair; but it was always made. We were told that the effort had been made again and again by the most powerful city officials, but that it always failed and that any such efforts always must fail. However, after thinking the matter over, we came to the conclusion, that, as honest officials, we had no alternative other than to try to enforce the law. Accordingly we summoned the police captains before us, and informed them that the law must be carried out rigidly. It took us one or two Sundays before we could make the force understand that they had to do their duty. For years and years the entire body of police had been accustomed to seeing the powerful men who stood high in the dominant political party do whatever they wished unmolested. For years every policeman's well being had depended upon the hold he had over influential politicians. With a force trained under such conditions, it needed a violent wrench to sever them from their past habits. They could not at first bring themselves to interfere with the rich liquor dealers the aldermen or ex-aldermen, whom they had always regarded with fear as the 'bosses' of their respective wards. The honest members of the force, however, speedily saw the sincerity of the Commission and turned in with hearty zeal to execute its wishes, feeling much relieved themselves that at last an effort for fair play and impartiality had been made. The rest of the force was brought to order by rough measures. Captains were transferred and rebuked, or ordered for trial, patrolmen were fined and dismissed. When, in a given precinct, we found that certain liquor dealers persistently kept open the captain was told that he would be put on trial and dismissed if they were not forthwith shut up. Two or three weeks of this sufficed By that time the saloons were practically closed, and they were not again opened.

"The basest portion of the New York press, including some of the daily papers of largest circulation, went into a perfect agony of rage over what we did. Indeed, so shameful was their conduct as to give rise to the belief that not a few of them were bribed by some of the brewers or liquor dealers; for we had attacked the wealthiest organizations in New York City. It was of course, impossible to show whether these suspicions were true and the conduct of these newspapers due to corruption, or whether they were merely actuated by a shameless desire to pander to the passions and appetites of the worst class of our citizens. In any event their attitude was very discreditable to the profession of which they formed a part, and to the people upon whose credulity they traded.

"The politicians were almost equally nervous over our action. They were haunted by that nightmare of the ordinary politician, the fear of losing votes, and were pitifully anxious for the adoption of any colorless course which would not offend anybody, but which consequently would not accomplish anything.

"Having taken our stand, however, we felt as little inclined to yield to the abuse of the disreputable portion of the New York press as to yield to the fears and threats of the politicians. We were executive officers. Our was to enforce the law, and we enforced it.

"We have thus given, I hope, a valuable object lesson in the enforcement of law. It happens that we have done so at the expense of the liquor dealers, who wish to violate the law for their own pecuniary benefit, and at the expense of their customers, who wish to gratify their appetites illegally; but the lesson taught is just as applicable to other communities, with other needs, as it is to New York. More important than even the question of what law is, is the question of the honest enforcement of the law. Lawlessness breeds anarchy. A community has no claim to call itself civilized until it can call itself law abiding. Free government is impossible unless executive officers carry out the laws in good faith when once they have been enacted. The law breaker is the foe of American civilization and of republican government, and the worst of all public servants is the official who connives at law-breaking."

The Radio Craze

Probably nothing during the past ten years has awakened so much furore as the Radio fad, for fad it surely is, same as the great influx of phonographs a few years ago. Of course we realize that the Radio has come to stay, and under no circumstances could the American public be divorced from it, yet after all the results we get from it are comparatively tame. Two or three more years of experimenting are going to bring forth a wonderful climax to wireless transmission of sound. The real cause and operation of Radio is still a mystery and mystery it will always remain undoubtedly. Like electricity, there is no beginning or end to its uses and neither have we a satisfactory explanation of the phenomenon.

Many would be customers of Radio are waiting simply to see what time will bring forth and while they would much enjoy a set, they are skeptical about buying and then being chagrined to learn their $200 outfit was a obsolete. Developments are bobbing up over night so that the Radio bought today in a month would not have the latest improvements. Five, six and eight tube sets are now as common as flies on a sugar bowl, and while the manufacturers claim to make them reach from coast to coast, it is doubtful if many of them are practical talkers over more than half this distance. In fact we know of no outfit in this vicinity which will carry on a successful program further away than Detroit or Chicago—that is, without interference. It is usual to catch Newark, New Jersey, Council Bluffs Iowa, and San Francisco on the air but do you know of anyone who is getting anything worth listening to from these points? Detroit and Chicago furnishes most of our concerts and speeches, and beyond it is mostly a jumble of squeaks and squawks which will jar your nerves and rasp your ears. But as science and invention goes hand in hand, we believe that five years will see some miracles performed by wireless—at least we hope so. Little did Marconi dream of present conditions when he set up his first antenna calculated to signal distant ships in the ocean. It was then not supposed that any sounds but telegraphic codes could be sent, and even that was limited to certain conditions of the atmosphere. Sea-going craft at once became users and valuable cargos and precious lives saved were the result, but this is ancient history. You can go down into deep mines, into the depths of the sea, in fact anywhere there is communication with the air, and listen to voices twelve hundred miles away. When we think what this means to Arctic explorers in the far north, to pilgrims on desert sands, to wanderers in the heart of darkest Africa, we marvel.

TROUBLED political conditions, especially in the smaller countries of Europe since the great war, have given novelists an opportunity to return to those charming romantic subjects in which someone who never expected the honor is made a king; because a princess falls in love with him, or a set of revolutionists must have a monarch at once to stick upon a throne and seize the first available man. Some of the most delightful stories ever written have had such themes.

The author of "King Tommy" is a great story-teller and a master of humor. He has produced a refreshing blend of romance, adventure and fun. The mythical kingdom of Lystria in which the plot is laid might be any one of half a dozen small but actively disturbed countries in eastern Europe.

Chapter XII

Without a sound Lancaster leaped at him.

Joan saw the secretary snatch up the lamp and hold it on high. She heard his screaming, terrified voice above the uproar. He stood like some squat statue illuminating the space above the dark in which Lancaster and Lawson sprawled, clutching at each other like two primeval cave men.

It was grotesque, for it was like a man fighting with himself; and, in fact, it might have been Lancaster fighting with his evil angel. He was no match for Lawson, but at first his pent-up fury, at last unleashed, matched the two equally. Then Lawson flung his adversary from him and struggled to his knees. As Lancaster grasped him and tried to rise he flung him down again. Lancaster's head struck the corner of the iron bedstead. His hands unclosed; he sighed and lay perfectly still. Joan saw the look of malignant rage upon Lawson's face, saw him raise his heel above the face of the unconscious man. He would have ground out Lancaster's life, but that Joan pulled the revolver from her pocket and thrust it into his face for the second time.

Lawson staggered backward, rage and terror depicted upon his features in the light of the swaying oil lamp. At that moment Myers was crouching near her. He set the lamp down. Joan felt a sharp pain in the upper part of her arm. She saw the secretary putting something into his pocket. He dodged the wavering revolver and backed toward the door, pulling Lawson with him.

"I'm going to finish this!" yelled Lawson.

Myers clutched at him and pulled him into the hall. Joan heard Myers' eager whispers, and Lawson's struggles and angry muttering gradually subside.

Then she heard them enter the secretary's room, and, forgetting them instantly, she bent over Lancaster and raised his head upon her knee.

He was breathing heavily. The blow had only stunned him. Joan tried to lift him upon the bed, but he was too heavy for her. As she was attempting to do so, however, the door opened and Mrs. Fraser came in.

"I found a key," she whispered, trembling. "I heard them fighting. Heaven help me, what has that devil done to the doctor?"

"He isn't badly hurt," said Joan. "Help me get him upon the bed."

Mrs. Fraser and Joan succeeded. Lancaster lay there, still unconscious. The matron clung heavily to the bedstead, looking at Joan piteously.

"I know it all now," she muttered. "I should have known before if I'd listened to the Millville gossip. That devil is his brother."

"Yes," said Joan shortly. "What are you going to do, Mrs. Fraser?"

"I'm going to stand by the doctor," the woman answered. "I stood by him year after year when I thought he was possessed by an evil spirit. Wouldn't I stand by him now?"

"Good," said Joan. "And I, too. Tomorrow we'll make short work of those men."

"Heaven save you, you don't know that man, Miss Wentworth," muttered the matron. "He's a devil. He has no pity. And he has a devil ten times worse than himself."

"Myers? Who is he?"

"He was his assistant here. He was tried once, they tell me, for poisoning his sweetheart. He sent her candy—but they couldn't find any poison in her body. It was his master made the analysis, and he lied to get Myers free and have his hold on him. It's all plain to me now, Miss Wentworth."

"If you knew this," said Joan, "you should have told me; you should have told the police, told anyone rather than let him drug Doctor Lancaster day after day."

"I thought it was the doctor who was in league with him," the matron muttered. "Miss Wentworth, I'm timid, I'm easily frightened, but not another day will I keep silent. Tomorrow—"

"Yes, tomorrow," said Joan. "You'd better go to bed now, Mrs. Fraser. I'll guard the doctor with my revolver, and tomorrow we'll end these years of slavery. Doctor Lancaster is a free man. Think of him as a free man. The past is all behind us."

The matron slipped away stealthily to her room. Joan took her seat beside Lancaster, listening to the incoherent mutterings which had begun. Presently his eyes opened. He stared at her for some minutes until recognition came into them.

"Joan!" he whispered, stretching out his hand to hers.

She let him take and hold it, and sat beside him, while he began muttering again. Gradually he began to realize where he was, and to remember.

"It is all true, then, Joan," he said. "He has had his revenge for his fancied wrongs. He has had the best years of my life, and he has beaten me in the end."

"Beaten you?" asked Joan. "You are not beaten. They are at their wits' ends what to do now, and tomorrow you will send them packing and begin your new life."

"A pitiful hope," he answered. "For he has given me back one thing—my faith in that poor woman upstairs, and, with it, a greater faith in humanity; but he has robbed me of all my hope."

"Why, John?"

"Because I could not have imagined that humanity was so vile. Joan, I am crushed by his revelation. If he entered this room now I feel that his will would dominate mine."

"Those are the words of a sick man," said Joan. "Tomorrow you will adjust yourself. Tomorrow you will be strong. Why, hardly a man on earth could do what you have done with the morphine."

"I suppose I shall carry on my fight," he answered wearily. "But victory will mean nothing to me."

"I shall stand by your side until I have seen you conquer, and until I have seen you happy in your success."

"And then, Joan?"

"Then? Then I shall go somewhere, I suppose."

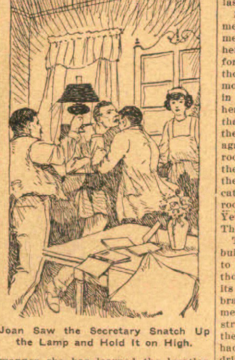
"Go away? From me? Is it because of Mrs. Dana?"

"Because of her, John."

"But she is nothing to me. She was never anything. Even my monomania of revenge rose out of wounded pride, not love. Surely you will not leave me because I once thought that I loved another?"

"It isn't that, John. But, you see, she has been an integral part of your life all these years. Even though her mind was gone, there was the consciousness of her presence that ate into your brain; she was the mainspring of your existence here. She would have been your wife today, but for that dastard's scheme. She is innocent, she has been deeply wronged, and her life has become bound up with yours indissolubly. You see, John, there is no getting away from that."

"Joan, don't you know she hates me? She thinks that my death will avenge her wrongs and cure her of her troubles. She has tried three times to kill me. In some mysterious manner she has learned the location of my room. Once she stabbed me in the wrist with a table-knife. Once she got the matron's revolver, but fortunately it was unloaded. I have been planning to send her somewhere where she could be better cared for and where my presence would not be a constant incitation to her."



Joan Saw the Secretary Snatch Up the Lamp and Hold It on High.

Joan shook her head. "It is all part of the past," she said. "One can't cancel the past. One must just carry it with one and try to profit by it. You know that, John."

"You do not love me, Joan."

She turned her face away; tears that filled her eyes came from the depths of her being. Lancaster took both her hands in his.

"You love me, Joan?"

"Too well to wrong you and myself," she answered. "Too well to let our love build a wall between us. So well that I would rather let the spiritual bond remain, rather than mar it."

He drew her toward him, and she remained with her cheek resting against his, with his arms about her. She could not stir. A strange physical lethargy seemed to hold her limbs, but her will was unshaken.

"Your last word, Joan?" whispered Lancaster.

"No, dear," she answered.

The humorous look that came at such odd moments into Lancaster's eyes flickered there now. "Your very last?" he asked.

"O, don't ask me to deny my resolution," she said.

She released herself and stood beside him. As she did so she had a sensation as if her feet rested on a cushion of air. Her physical weakness was matched by her sense of instability; she longed with all her heart to lean within the arms outstretched toward her; she knew that, if she had given Lancaster life, he could give her the strength of life; he was of her own people, and all that was chivalric and dear in the land she had loved seemed embodied in him. And before her she saw the closing hospital walls of some far distant city: she must exile herself from everything that she had known.

"You little stubborn thing, Joan!" said Lancaster tenderly. "But I shall go on loving you."

"I shall love you, John."

"I shall hear from you sometimes?"

"Yes. And I shall remain in Avonmouth until your battle is won. But there will be no battle. They know that they are beaten. You will never be weak again."

"No," said Lancaster. "But, O Joan, if you had said 'yes' to me it would have been so easy."

With the maternal feeling that is part of every woman's love for the man she loves, she stooped and kissed his forehead.

"You must try to sleep now," she said. "I shall leave the revolver with you, and you shall lock your door."

"I am not afraid of them," he answered. "They can do nothing, Joan. Keep it to assure you of your own safety."

That seemed the better way. There was nothing that the pair could do to Lancaster. If they aimed at anyone it would be she. She saw that, and she went out without speaking to Lancaster again. In the hall she breathed more freely. It was ended now, and she knew that she had done the right thing, the only possible thing. But Lancaster had not surmised the terrific woman's battle which she had fought during those last few minutes.

She stood in the hall for a few moments in uncertainty. She did not mean to sleep, but to lie awake with her door open, resting, and listening for any movements in the house. But, though her brain was awake, she was more tired than she had ever been in her life. She could hardly drag her limbs upstairs, and again she had that sense of walking on air. Under the little burning lamp she stopped again to gather strength to go to her room. The ticking of the clock in the hall below was the only sound in the house. She strained her ears to catch the sound of voices from Myers' room, but she could hear nothing. Yet the men could not be asleep. They must be planning together.

The silence in the ramshackle old building was a ghastly one. It seemed to hide innumerable thoughts, as if those of all who had ever lived within its walls survived, breaking upon her brain in invisible waves. She felt enmeshed in a web, as the dreamer who struggles to wake into free life from the horrors of nightmare. The wind had gone down, and the raindrops dripped rhythmically from the eaves.

Joan had an intense inclination to surrender, to run back into Lancaster's room, cry to him to help her, to let her fight beside him as long as they lived. And the silence, which was becoming more terrific every moment, was unmistakably malevolent.

She reached her room and tried to shake away her fears. She went to the window and leaned out. The night was clearing, and a delicious air blew in from the hills. Not a light was to be seen in Millville or Lancaster. And she wept again, heartbroken. It was all ended, that peace which had begun to inclose her, and all her hopes, and all that love within was bound up so intimately with the idea of home.

Genius of Philology Given Stern Justice

Curious pleas have sometimes been put forward in support of the reprieve of notorious criminals. One of the strangest was that on behalf of George Ruloff, an American school teacher, who was convicted in 1870 of a series of robberies and murders, his own wife and daughter being among the victims. For cold-blooded cruelty his record would be hard to beat, but Ruloff had his other side.

He was an ardent philologist, and had been engaged for years on the invention of a universal language. No one could attempt to palliate his crimes, but a widely signed petition was presented to the governor of Virginia for his reprieve on the ground that as his invention, if completed, would be of the utmost benefit to mankind it would be criminal folly to extinguish such a light of learning. The governor thought otherwise and Ruloff was duly hanged.

Spanish Swamp Home of Wild Camel Herd

Wild camels exist in western Europe, within two days' journey from Piccadilly circus, writes a correspondent of the London Mail. There are a considerable number of them in this mysterious "colony," but no one knows exactly how many. To survive they have actually become semi-aquatic.

Up the Guadalquivir in Andalusia is the dreariest malarial swamp in Spain, and perhaps in the world, an endless vista of waterlogged wilderness, broken only by occasional low islands covered with willow scrub. Here, among enormous flocks of gulls and greylag goose, teal, widgeon, pochard and mallard, dwell the outlaw camels. In another five years the colony will have completed a century of life in western Europe. Their ancestors were brought over from Africa in 1829 by the Marquis de Villafranca for farm work.

Villafranca's horses panicked, however, as horses will unless carefully "acclimatized" to camel, and there were some nasty accidents. Rather than have the work of his estates upset by labor trouble, the marquis turned his camels loose. Some were killed. The descendants of those who took to the "marisma" survived.

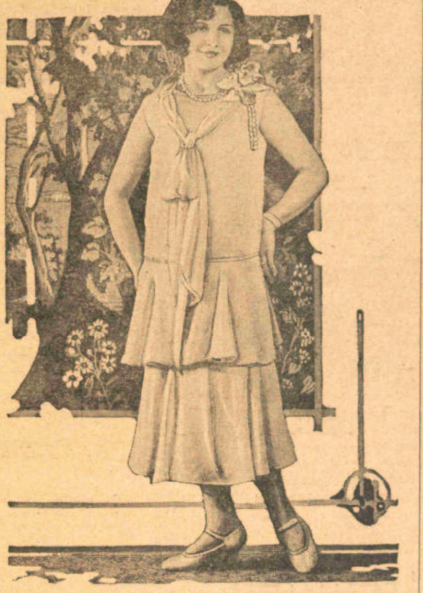
Copying Nature

Cover a billiard table in a bright red cloth instead of the customary soft green and every billiard hall would be deserted in half an hour. Billiard tables from the beginning were covered with green for the same reason that nature covers her open stretches usually with green, because it is soothing to the eye.

Even the dullest brain can think up reasons for not getting up.

PARTY FROCK THAT IS IN FAVOR; STAMP BLOUSE WITH GAY COLOR

If THE crystal globe of fashion-destiny reveals the future truly to those who peer into its depths to learn of "styles to be," then assuredly this summer will see chiffon enthroned as the reigning fabric for evening frocks. At this very moment dance and party dresses are unfolding a continuous and fascinating story of diaphanous georgette crepes and chiffons, always with the shoulder bouquet playing its part of coquetry and loveliness. It is peach-colored georgette, touched with the magic of the stylist's art which accounts for the charm of the party dress in the picture. Even our party dresses flaunt a flowing necktie, for neckties are a very important trimming item this season. Artificial orchids are worn on the shoulder.



Use Chiffon and Shoulder Bouquet.

Sheer materials reign supreme throughout advance costume collections. Billowy masses of chiffon manifest in tiered circular ruffles on evening frocks, in insets of circular portions that make the skirt measure yards around the bottom; in voluminous bows of chiffon at the left hipline and in countless other entrancing ways. Notwithstanding all this superfluity of transparent fabric, the effect as a whole is of extreme simplicity, for there is little or no trimming save the inevitable never-to-be-omitted shoulder bouquet. Another item, very important is the satin costume slip over which these frocks of transparency are posed. It must be nothing less than perfect, both as to color and fit.

Very many of the new chiffon frocks are trimmed in lace dyed an accurate match. Not only are airy-fairy delicately meshed silk laces used, but those of the heavier sort are employed for yokes, bandings and insets.

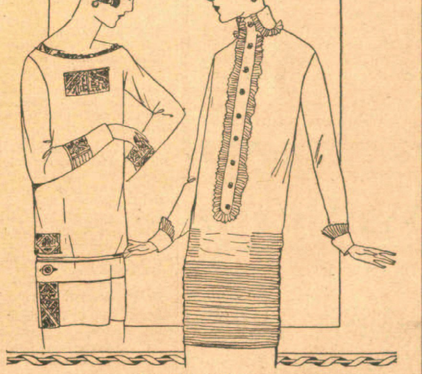
So pronounced is the vogue for sheer materials that even our daytime dresses are being made of georgette crepe. New wood tones are especially emphasized, also beige in these exquisite frocks. A new note is sounded in the chiffon shawl which accompanies this sleeveless dress of like material. These scarf-like shawls use the full width of the georgette or chiffon. They are fringed on three sides with hand-tied floss, the selfsame color.

Perhaps the tunic blouse is indebted to the ensemble suit for the honors showered upon it this season. This much is sure, the blouse and the tunic are topics supreme in the season's modes. Paris is content to keep coats and matching skirts severely simple, letting the blouse receive the full force of lavish touches and decorative features.

The French couturier has the gift of saying much in little. That is why the woman of fashion takes joy in owning a blouse "from Paris." It is sure to have a cunning touch here and there which stamps its artistic origin. Even the simplest tailored blouse is not immune from a delightful appeal of subtle detail. Per example, note the blouse to the right in this picture. In this model the artist resorts to tiny horizontal plaitings for molding the blouse to the figure. It is an excellent suggestion to carry out in one's tailored blouse, that is if one is not so favored as to be in a position to indulge in the purchase of the "original model." The thought is particularly valuable as it illustrates the tendency to get away from the short hip-band effect. The high turnover collar, with its plaitings, likewise the box plait down the front and the cuffs, are tailored-looking without being severe.

The dressier blouse to the left shows the inevitable touch of embroidery. It also has a graceful way of evading the now passe high hip band by means of an abbreviated skirt effect buttoned at the side.

Color is a subject of vital importance when it comes to the blouse or tunic. There is no such thing, this season, as overindulgence in gay hues. The solid shades may be yellow, scarlet or startling green, or they may be conveyed in prints, which qualify as the mode only when they are bizarre.



Paris Style in Blouses.

Feminine Haircuts

In London the newest mode of feminine haircut is facetiously styled the "deerstalker." It provides a sharp bob across the back with lappets of long hair left over each ear, which may be arranged either on top of the head or to conceal the fact that the hair is bobbed at the back

Neckwear Fashions

Tailored neckwear is very good just now. Striped linen is successfully used for the development of some of these sets. Tailored vests are being shown again, and there are some high-collared effects that have a strong style appeal. Lace combinations are also holding their own, as are rufflings of all kinds.

Fur and Metal Lace

Narrow bands of brown fur harmonize with the gold tones of new frocks of metal lace. Chinchilla is used to trim dresses fashioned of silver lace.

The University of Montana like all other state universities is supported by funds from the state treasury, but it so happened a few years ago, says Upton Sinclair that the money in the state treasury was very low and the university badly in need of financial assistance so chancellor Edwards of the U asked Prof. Levine to make a study of the tax situation throughout the state in order to discover if all were paying their rightful share of taxes. Levine investigated and found that many large concerns were paying only a small percentage of the proper tax and among these was the Anaconda Copper Co. a gigantic concern with much influence in Montana. Levine showed his report to the chancellor who lost his courage when he saw that Big Business might be offended so he finally ordered Levine to suppress the report but Levine refused. had the report published and in return was "fired" from the University. Prof. Seligman, called the foremost authority on taxation in this country says that Levine's book is one of the best obtainable but what difference did that make to a university where wealth exerted so much influence?

A New Building Promoted

On Tuesday the different farm organizations of the county met at Hillsdale in connection with a committee to launch the project of erecting a building on the corner of the fair grounds and officers were elected as follows: President, John Williams; sec., Denis Clancy; treasurer, Orville Cornell A committee of representative citizens, one from each township, to work among the ruralites of their communities to raise the necessary funds, has been appointed.

Fair Secretary C. W. Terwilliger states the Fair officials have nothing whatever to do with the project and it is up to the several farm organizations to put this building on the grounds. The Agricultural society requires however, that all necessary funds with a neat margin for emergencies, shall be in hand before erection can begin, as no unfinished structures are desired on the grounds, and to this the organizations have agreed.

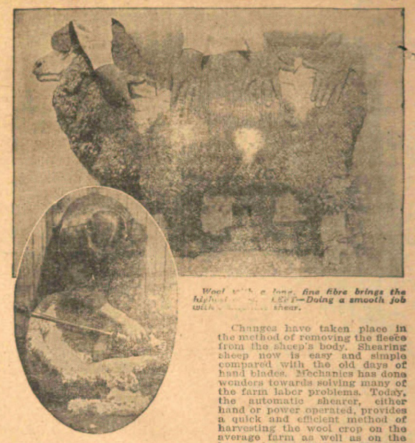
Changes in Harvesting the Wool Crop



Wool with a long, fine fibre brings the highest [illegible] LEFT—Doing a smooth job with [illegible] shear.

There have been many changes in the operations of securing the wool crop. It has not been many years since it was considered necessary to clean the wool before it was taken from the sheep. This used to be done by driving the flock to a lake or stream where each animal was thoroughly washed. Modern methods of wool scouring have made sheep-washing unnecessary, although even today, a very dirty fleece is discriminated against by the buyer.

There are certain precautions observed by successful sheep owners at shearing time which have been found to increase the value of the clip. For example, bright days are selected on which to shear, as this will avoid obtaining fleeces wet with dew or rain. Do not shear sheep on the ground, but rather use a clean platform upon which to do the shearing operation. Keep the fleece in one piece, and clip off some of the inferior tags.

Changes have taken place in the method of removing the fleece from the sheep's body. Shearing sheep now is easy and simple compared with the old days of hand blades. Mechanics has done wonders towards solving many of the farm labor problems. Today, the automatic shearer, either hand or power operated, provides a quick and efficient method of harvesting the wool crop on the average farm as well as on the large sheep ranches. Machine shearing leaves no ridges and secures the maximum amount of fleece which is very important with wool at present prices.

For tying up each fleece, use, if possible, a paper twine. If binder twine is used, experience has shown that the fibres of the twine get into the wool, and as they cannot be removed, they are a damage to the resulting manufactured woolen goods. In preparing wool for shipment, large sacks which will hold several fleeces are used.

The program of sheep owners should include plans for most effectively harvesting a quality wool. The wool crop will be a large source of income this year, as it will be for years to come. High prices are being offered for the 1925 clip, and extremely satisfactory returns are assured. The changes that have taken place in the methods of harvesting wool are of great value to the sheep industry.

She spoke of the general attitude of the press toward Prohibition and the boast of the "Wets" that they had millions of dollars to use in putting their argument before the public. 10 lbs. more per cow - per day!

Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

Maniac's Frolic

An escaped lunatic at Binghamton, N. Y., drove a Lackawanna flagman from his station, then filled his pipe and sat down to take things easy until he found he had no match. A train whistled. Flagging the train he asked the engineer for a "light." That was more fun than he had counted on, so every train was stopped after that while engineers and trainmen tried to make out what the "new flagman" was up to. But hospital attendants found their missing ward and his vacation was short-lived. — Capper's Weekly.

Important to All Women Readers of This Paper

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine will do for them. By inclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by Parcel Post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

France Tells Arms Traffic Conference She Must Have Security Pact.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

FRANCE is overlooking no opportunity to assure the world that she cannot be expected to adhere to any international peace and disarmament agreements until she receives guarantee of the security of her boundaries and those of Poland and the nations of the little entente. She continues to distrust Germany and insists that until the other great powers promise protection for her and her allies, she must remain fully armed and must keep on manufacturing armament for herself and for the smaller nations that look to her for their safety from German aggression.

Paul Boncour, powerful Socialist party leader, said all this and more very frankly to the international conference on the control of arms traffic in Geneva, giving warning that it was doomed to failure unless the demands of France were heeded. He threatened his colleagues with another world war if they persisted in overlooking this security problem, and said France intended to revive the discredited Geneva protocol at the September meeting of the League of Nations assembly; but he offered to discuss any adequate substitute for that pact that might be offered.

As for a convention for the control of traffic in arms, M. Boncour said this would be worthless and unjust unless it were confirmed immediately by a convention regulating private production, "because production is the originating point and traffic is merely the result." This is contrary to the view expressed by Congressman Theodore E. Burton, head of the American delegation, who insists foreign shipments of munitions, not the private manufacture, is the important thing. Mr. Burton on Thursday offered a scheme dealing with the traffic in poisonous gases.

Both Brazil and Uruguay advocate a rule under the proposed convention that no nation may sell arms to a rebel party until a half of the nations signing the treaty, including a certain number of the great powers, recognize the government of a revolutionary party. This is opposed by the American delegation because in most revolutions in the western hemisphere the hands of the United States would be tied, while awaiting the recognition of a revolutionary party by numerous European powers. This is looked on as a serious menace to the Monroe doctrine.

ONE of the most significant events of the week was the first public address of Ambassador Houghton in London. Undoubtedly speaking for President Coolidge's administration, he tactfully but pointedly admonished the nations of Europe that unless they abandoned warlike ambitions and destructive methods and policies the American people would cease to aid in European reconstruction. He did not name any nation, but it was generally accepted that his warning was directed especially at France, and everywhere except in France the speech was warmly commended.

"But we, too, are a practical people. When we lent our savings to make it possible for the peoples of central Europe to get work it was because we knew that only in this way could Europe as a whole be made to function economically. When we lent of our savings to rebuild markets that had been destroyed it was because we knew that in no other way could they be enjoyed again.

"That was a necessary beginning. It was common sense. If we went at the job with a certain moral earnestness, let that go to our credit. It is natural for us to assume that those who have suffered so much from the war should seek a settlement which as far as humanly possible should be free of the conditions leading directly to war. To that end and in that spirit we have helped.

"But we have never forgotten that there was a limit beyond which we could not go. The full measure of American helpfulness can be obtained only when the American people are assured that the time for destructive methods and policies has passed and the time for peaceful upbuilding has come. They are asking themselves if that time, as a fact, has come. And that question they cannot today answer. An answer must be given to them. It must come from the peoples of Europe, who alone can make decisions.

"If the answer is peace, then you may be sure that America will help to her generous utmost. But if, God forbid, that answer will continue confused and doubtful, then I fear those helpful processes which are now in motion must inevitably cease."

IF THE Atlantic coast rum-running fleet is not routed and dispersed it will not be the fault of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrews, in charge of the treasury's activities in enforcing prohibition. Under his direction the naval and aerial resources of the coast guard of the New York area are being used to effect a blockade against the liquor smugglers. More than sixty coast guard boats, manned by 400 men and fully armed, are patrolling the sea and are assisted by thirteen seaplanes which are mapping and photographing the position of the carriers of contraband and scouting for shore boats. In reserve are many more boats, swift converted submarine chasers. Every vessel of the rum fleet is closely watched by one or more coast guard boats so that it is virtually impossible for shore boats to obtain and land any liquor. The blockade extends from Connecticut to New Jersey and its every move is directed from shore by radio.

AFTER defeating the Spanish in Morocco, the Riff tribesmen proceeded to invade the French part of that country with the idea of driving out the French. But they are up against the doughty General Lyautey and his experienced troops and already have been defeated in several sanguinary battles. General Columbat met the Riffians north of Fez and drove them back, but he reports that they were well organized and well armed and showed themselves able tacticians, withdrawing in good order despite heavy losses. The French government says its troops will not cross the Spanish border in pursuit of Abdel-Krim's followers unless specifically permitted to do so by Spain and England. Italy wants a finger in this pie and has notified France that it desires to share in the operations and in probable spoils, but France and Spain declare no outsider is wanted.

CHARGES of recent manipulation of wheat in the Chicago market for speculative purposes are being investigated by the Department of Agriculture and Senator Capper of Kansas says a report is to be expected soon. The Chicago Board of Trade also received charges that there was a corner in May corn and rye and it requested all having complaints regarding market manipulation to present them to the directors May 12. A complaint has been made that the Grain Marketing company, a farmer's concern, should not be allowed to trade in provision futures, as it is supposed to be doing business for the farmers and they are not supposed to be interested in provision trading. This was to be taken up with other matters.

DIRECTOR of the Budget Lord has just completed a tour of the country lasting one month, in which he has told many thousands of tax payers about the President's economy program. He has now begun work on the next budget, in which there will be a substantial reduction. Mr. Coolidge hopes this cut will be as great as $300,000,000, making the total estimates to be submitted to the next congress about $3,000,000,000. The treasury, it is predicted, will show a surplus of about $100,000,000 for the current year. The total volume of tax receipts may be cut by 12 per cent, the method of doing this to be decided by congress. Secretary Mellon wants surtaxes reduced and rates on estate taxes lowered or eliminated.

IN RECOGNITION of the growing importance of aviation in warfare and, possibly, in the belief that it will check the movement for a separate air force, Secretary of the Navy Wilbur has announced that hereafter aviation is to be a major course of study in the Naval academy at Annapolis and that every graduate must qualify as a flyer within two years after graduation.

ALL communists in Bulgaria have been outlawed by the government and their organizations are being exterminated. The Macedonian revolutionary organization, whose chief, Alexandroff, was assassinated last September on orders from Moscow because he would not bolshevize it, is giving the government great assistance, providing large bands of fighting men where they are most needed. This secret force numbers, it is said, about 100,000. The communists, who are being hunted like rats, are fighting back desperately. Several witnesses in the trial of those accused of the Sofia cathedral bomb outrage have testified that the Third Internationale at Moscow was responsible for the affair, but Zinovieff has reiterated his denial of this.

THE dirigible Los Angeles made a speedy and altogether successful flight from Lakehurst to Mayaguez, Porto Rico, where she found the mooring ship Patoka. From there the big airship flew to the Virgin Islands.

PROMINENT women from many lands met last week in Washington for the quinquennial session of the International Council of Women. Lady Aberdeen, the president, was in the chair and Secretary of Commerce Hoover delivered the welcoming address on behalf of the government. The disarmament resolution presented to the convention called for "general disarmament as the ideal to be aimed at, preceded by a gradual and general reduction of armaments under effective control to be agreed upon by the respective governments and the League of Nations."

SOCIALISTS of Germany made charges of irregularity and fraud in the election of Von Hindenberg as president and formally asked that the election be declared void. Nevertheless the arrangements for the inauguration of the field marshal on May 12 went right ahead. There was speculation as to the attitude the allied governments would adopt. Von Hindenburg is still listed as a war culprit, so those governments would have to "forget" that fact or else decline to congratulate him, which would be considered an insult by Germany.

LEON TROTZKY, who used to be the soviet war minister and was deposed and sent to Transcaucasia, has been recalled to Moscow on his promise to obey the dictates of the Bolshevist party, and probably will be given the post of commissar of foreign trade, vacated by Krassin on his appointment as ambassador to France. His arrival in Moscow was virtually ignored by the people and he will have hard work to recover his influence and popularity. Zinovieff, it was announced, would take a long vacation in the Caucasus—probably because of his failure to produce the promised revolutions in other lands.

W. T. VAN ORMAN, piloting the Goodyear III, won the national elimination balloon race and will represent the United States in the International contest. Starting from St. Joseph, Mo., his balloon traveled about 600 miles, coming down at Reform, Ala.

CHARGING criminal conspiracy to violate the state antitrust laws, the state of Mississippi has filed suit against the Ford Motor company for $12,000,000 penalties. Tariff Vital Issue in German Politics

Dusseldorf, Germany.—A gigantic economic struggle is going on behind the scenes in Germany of which the general public at present knows or suspects little. The issue is, shall Germany have high protective tariffs or shall it enter into a customs union with as many nations as possible?

Those who favor a high protective tariff argue that, so long as Germany is fettered with reparations payments, its production costs will continue to be so high that there is danger of dumping by foreign countries. Therefore, the only way to help German industry is to protect the home industries by high tariffs.

The other argument in favor of customs unions runs as follows: Germany has become so crippled by the loss of Alsace-Lorraine and her colonies, the slicing off of Upper Silesia, and the placing under foreign administration of the Saar and Memel regions, that the only salvation of her industry lies in branching out into foreign countries. But as other nations would be unwilling to receive German goods unless similar favorable treatment be accorded their goods in Germany, the customs union advocates argue that Germany should abolish tariff barriers as far as possible. This may mean the ruination of some few German industries, they admit, but, on the whole, Germany will be benefited.

This issue will come to the fore more than ever after the turmoil of the Presidential election has subsided.

NEARLY INSANE AT TIMES

Mrs. Saunders Tells how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieved Troubles of Change of Life

Knoxville, Tenn.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound while going through the Change of Life. I was very nervous, could not sleep and had melancholy spells. In fact, I was nearly insane at times and my memory was almost a blank. I was so weak I could not do my housework half of the time and suffered dreadfully with my back. My doctor said I would have to worry it out and I went through this for three years before I began taking the Vegetable Compound which I saw advertised. I think it was eight bottles that I took. It has been two years since I took any and I haven't had a doctor since for that trouble, I do all my washing and ironing and I have gained from 116 to 138 pounds. I feel so well I think I do not need any medicine now, but I advise all women who suffer physically and mentally as I did to give the Vegetable Compound a fair trial. I hope it will do as much for them as it did for me."—Mrs. T. A. SAUNDERS, 711 E. Depot Street, Knoxville, Tenn.

Resinol healed stubborn sore

Elyria, Ohio, March 1:—"I feel it my duty and pleasure to thank you for the wonderful cure your Resinol salve has wrought for my husband, who suffered from an open sore on the back of his neck for four years. Several doctors said that it was a cancer and advised its removal, but it was so near the base of the brain that we feared an operation. I had found Resinol Ointment so effective for cuts, burns and similar things that I induced my husband to try that. After using only two jars of Resinol, the sore entirely healed—every trace of it has disappeared. Resinol certainly was a God-send to us!" (Signed) Mrs. E. E. Kennedy, 243 E. 8th St.

Breed Snails Which Find Ready Market

Many people remember with moist lips the succulent winkles which are procurable throughout the old land. These, as we all know, come from the sea; the smell of the salty deep is still upon them. Few know, however, that the edible land snails which are consumed in great quantities in European countries are cultivated on snail farms. These are patches of moist, clayey ground, fenced and separated by little water canals and provided with bushes and shrubbery for protection against the sun. The snails are fed principally on lettuce and other green stuff. Fruits and aromatic herbs are sometimes fed them to impart a special flavor to the flesh. Paris is the best customer for the snail breeder and fancier, for that metropolis consumes an average of 80,000,000 snails a year. In Switzerland and Bavaria these little animals are still a considerable article of commerce.—Family Herald.

Livestock Feeders At M. A. C. May 23

Livestock Feeders' Day, an annual event at M. A. C., will be held on May 23 this year, according to announcement just made by the animal husbandry department at the college. A general invitation has been issued for everyone interested in livestock feeding to gather at East Lansing for the meeting.

Results of extensive feeding experiments conducted during the past year by the college livestock specialists will be announced at the Feeders' Day. Different lots have been on feed and under careful observation in a number of classes, including calves, swine and horses.

M. A. C. Radio Station Closed May 8

Michigan's first agricultural radio school, broadcast this spring from the M. A. C. station, WKAR closed on Friday May 8, for a summer "recess". It is understood that the school will be re-opened next fall with a considerably expanded curriculum.

A check of registration for the five courses included in the school this spring shows that more than 2,500 formal enrollments were received at the college Short Course office. As a great many enrolled in more than one course, however, the number of individuals does not run as high as the enrollment figure. In addition, it is estimated by those in charge of the course that many thousands who did not bother to send in registration blanks listened to the lectures.

While plans have not been completed for next year's school, announcement has been made from the college extension office that the success of this year's broadcasting guarantees another series of courses with more variety in the subject matter. It is probable the air school will be started about the first of November, running for five months

Most of the mashers up around Flint are a little more careful than formerly as to how they approach damsels on the streets. Howard Freeman aged 30 made an attempt to get fresh while a "hello" girl from the local telephone office who was at that moment looking into the window of a jewelry store on the streets of Flint. He stepped briskly up to her and said: "How would you like to have one of those rings and just for that he is doing time in the city Bastile a much sadder but wiser man. The young lady who by the way is only 20 years old, and quite pretty, complained to a city dad who happened to be passing and the confounded old rascal called the cops. Now how's that for high? Why, its only a matter of a few years until it will not be safe to pass a fair damsel on the streets lest she might catch a flirt out of the corner of your eye. Of course Howard was too fresh, but he could have done worse.

The copper roof on the dome of the old Massachusetts State House at Boston was put on way back in 1831 and has never required one cent of outlay for repairs since that time. Think of it. 93 years since this copper sheating was put on. During this time it has been re-painted and re-guilded six times.

It is reported that the neighboring village of Addison has decided to pave its main street with concrete for a distance of one mile. If fhe tax payers down there are not familiar with paving costs they will be in due season, and we'll guarantee they will never again be caught with any such dodge. By the time they have finished paying for their concrete pavement a number of highly respected but financially poor people will have been driven to the county farms or to other fields, tax paying widows without any visible means of support will have been starved to death and the whole village impoverished by paying taxes on something which likely was not needed and which will serve to pilot traffic right on through to some larger trading point. There is no question but that the small burgs of this country are plunging into luxuries which they will never be able to surmount, but then of course as the old woman said when she kissed her cow "it depends upon your taste." In the opinion of considerable number of people the trend of the times, through trunk lines and automobiles are bringing about the ruin and decay of the small villages at a fair rate of speed, and the Lord only knows what 20 years will bring about.

The Baby Farm Activities

Recent investigations of the baby farm mystery in New York City whereby it was found the notorious widow of a German army officer had for some time been conducting a ranch where babies were taken to board and sooner or later disposed of, have led officials to believe there are a lot more of these same institutions being conducted in different parts of the country. No doubt such is the case and all the large cities probaby are more or less infected with the same conditions. It would be worse than useless to attempt to prove that large numbers of innocent babes are killed every month in the year because they are not wanted in the home and for other reasons. Most of these cases probably arise from illegitimate births among the younger class of women and girls. The instigators of such crimes should be punished quite severely and not only the murderers but the mother should be made to understand the terribleness of her crimes.

Arbor Day Fittingly Observed

A unique and rather pretty observance of Arbor Day is reported to us from the John L. Buck district west of North Adams and we hope our readers will forgive us for some delay in publishing this item. But as a matter of fact last week we had so much on the stringwe simply could not get it into type.

The affair was sponsored by the West Adams Womans Circle when a company of mothers and club members met at the John L. Buck school and a nice program was given by the pupils. Following the program Mrs. Raymond Barker talked on the subject of shrubbery and recommended that they care for the trees and shrubs which were about to be planted. O. W. Haskell was appointed as supervisor for the care of the maples, spirea and lilac. The committee in charge were Mesdames Raymond Barker, Reid Shepard, Marian Adams and Lewis Meeks. The teacher is Pauline Wells and she has given good enough satisfaction that she is engaged for another year. They tell us that team work is the slogan in this district, and patrons and teacher enjoy to the fullest extent each other's confidence in all movements for the public good. How many of our rural school districts can say the same?

Just Chester Handed Out Some Bouquets

Charlie West who was picked up by the Sheriff last March with an auto load of "bug juice" was expected to appear for trial on Tuesday, but changed his mind quite suddenly and on second thought decided to take his dose. Charlie might better have gone west, but now he can't. The Judge told Charlie that for some unbeknowst reason there are still people who think the law should not be observed. That kind of example encourages other people to suppose they can do the same. The Judge said he felt the only way was to send such men as Charlie to the Hoosegow and thereat he handed Mr. West a lemon in the shape of six months in the Ionia crook laundry also a fine of $200, and if the fine is not forthcoming, it means another six.

Another Charlie named Marriott unfortunately accused of taking a nip then driving his gas buggy was remanded to jail for 30 days and a fine of $75. In lieu of the fine he is to do 90 days, after which there is more to follow, as he is accused of burglarizing the Lewis filling station.

Methodist Brotherhood In Communion

The annual Konklave of the M. E. Brotherhood of Hillsdale county was held last week Friday evening at the Reading church with a bunch of delegates from surrounding districts present.

Knowing that "as a man eateth so he doeth" a banquet was served at 7 o'clock. Music was furnished by the county chorus and the male quartet composed of Arthur Wells Cleve Crater, Leslie Young and Charles Lee. Officers were elected for the following year: President Cleve Crater; vice president, Harry Stiefel, Reading; secretary and treasurer, Carlton Snyder, Frontier

Dr. Whitehouse of Albion College, gave an interesting address on crime and its relationship to the American home. Rev. H. Henry and a bunch from Hillsdale went over and attended the meeting.

American Forest week should annually become one of the most important events in each of our states. This nation's future depends upon an everlasting supply of timber. For four years the United States Forest service has directed observance of Forest Protection week. This year it felt that the best interests of forestry would be served by transferring observance of the week to non governmental agencies As a result various organizations all over the United States are taking an interest in the matter. Lumber manufacturers associations have rendered particular assistance The American public is one of the greatest offenders in forest destruction because of its carelessness with fire. If it can be awakened to its responsibility as the best guardian of its own forest resources, the first big step will have been taken in reforestation, as the young trees will have a chance tc grow without being blighted by thousands of forest fires which this nation now has annually.

The Slackers Are With Us

It is the misfortune of the newspaper publisher as well as men in other lines of business to accasionally get in touch with a man who does not pay his honest debts, in fact the newspaper going as it does into 500 homes of the community, when it is issued each week, finds the slackers and it is not at all uncommon to find one or two plebeians who have been overlooked until their subscription has been some time overdne. We are happty to state that in most cases the subscribers is willing to come across and settle his bill without any excuses whatever. But in a few cases it is necessary to put on the pressure to get what is honestly due the publisher. Such people are found in every walk of life and in all communities. In our short experience of publishing a paper we have uncovered a few of these nuisances and in one or two cases had serious trouble in getting what they owed us.

In the delinquent class of subscribers are found two kinds—the chap who never has any money to pay any of his bills, and the fellow who calculates to beat the publisher if he can. The latter puts up a hard luck story, tells you he never received only half the issues or he supposed he was paid up, or the fault is not his or he will hand you the arrearage right away. This fellow usually gets by without paying up unless the editor goes after him with an officer. The financially mbarassed gent goes unscathed out of real sympathy on the part of the printer. The skunk who subscribes for a term of three or six months and then allows his paper to come right along for six months after it expires, with the intention of refusing to pay for it, ought to be hung—and he usually has a hard time getting through the world. After he has lived all his life in a community, most of the citizens know him too well and they usually head him off—but the publisher can't always do this—results as stated.

The law in regard to newspaper accounts should be slightly amended. In the first place any person who subscribes for a paper should state at the time if he desires it stopped at the expiration, or if he does not at that time he should so state when it runs out. Otherwise the act should be classed as larceny, and the penalty fixed accordingly. As the law stands its makes liars of the subscribers and a world of trouble for the publisher.

FOOD FOR THE HOUSEHOLD

Broiled Porterhouse Steak.—Lay a thick slice of porterhouse between thin slices of round steak. On these thin slices rub a cut clove of garlic freely until both are well seasoned. Lay the beef sandwich into a broiler and cook as usual. As the meat cooks, the juices from the round steak will saturate the porterhouse, carrying the delicious garlic flavor into the middle piece. When the porterhouse is nearly cooked, remove the round steak and brown quickly. The round steak will be dry and unpalatable but can be ground and used in stock. Sprinkle the hot steak with chopped parsley, a bit of lemon juice and plenty of butter and serve at once. The aroma from the garlic will add greatly to the flavor.

Herford Salad.—Take a tablespoonful each of chopped celery, green peppers, chives and anchovies. Mix well and sprinkle over head lettuce. Serve with a French dressing made of olive oil, tarragon vinegar with paprika and salt.

Eggs a la Buckingham.—Make five slices of milk toast and arrange on a platter. Scramble four or five eggs and when done pour over the toast. Sprinkle with four tablespoonfuls of grated cheese. Put into the oven to melt the cheese.

Meat Pie.—Put through the meat grinder any leftover roast, with a little ham. Place in a buttered baking dish with a little stock or boiling water. Cover with baking powder biscuit and bake until the biscuits are brown. A bit of onion may be added for flavor, if desired.

Cream Slaw.—Slice cabbage very fine and pour over the following dressing: Take one and one-half tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, a dash of pepper, one-half teaspoonful of mustard, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one and one-half cupfuls of milk or milk and cream; pour over the boiling vinegar, stir in the flour and cook six minutes. Pour hot over the cabbage.

Winning The Children

While the slogans of the closing years of the first half century of organized effort are ringing in our ears, we are becoming accustomed to, and familiar with, those of the present: "Children First," "Win a Million Children," "Youth's Year."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union very early in its history recognized the value of educating the child in the principles of total abstinence and purity. As a result, there are in public life today, men and women who, believing in those principles, have made possible the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

We are beginning a new era of achievements. Having reached the goal of national prohibition, we face with confidence the "Greater Task ahead," the defending and holding of that which we have gained, and we believe that in this too, we shall be victorious.

We believe that the children, youth and young womanhood of our land, responding to the call of the new Crusade, will enlist in the campaign for total abstinence and loyalty to the Constitution of our country, the United States of America.

The value of the total abstinence pledge in the life of a child cannot be estimated; its influence remains through all the years that follow, building into the character that which shall be a safeguard as long as life itself shall last.

The department of Child Welfare, through its mothers' meetings is emphasizing the importance of training the children in total abstinence. We ask each local union to pledge one hundred children as our share of the million we are to win to sing our songs, shout our slogans, and obey the laws of our land.

To the mother in the home this training comes as a personal duty.

First, is the teaching by example then by precept. If the child has before him continually the example of total abstinence and obedience to the Constitution he will unconsciously follow. And as soon as the child is able to understand, the reason no alcohol is used in the home, should be given. If the Eighteenth Amendment is explained and the child is pledged, it usually means that total abstinence for life is assured.

If "every young mother belonged to the W. C. T. U." every child would have inculcated in its very being the principles of total abstinence and obedience to law, with the result that there would be growing up a generation that would uphold the Eighteenth Amendment

Because we have national constitutional prohibition, many children who have had neither example nor precept are now being taught, and through them, many mothers are being won to total abstinence.

In the heart of the child may be planted the seeds of truth and much fruit will result when he is fully grown.

Frances Willard has given us these words: "Silver workers say that when you can see your face in the molten metal, that is the time to work. So it is with the heart of childhood in that impressionable stage when it reflects your character and teaching; then stamp with a firm, true hand the white cross upon the soul, the habits of personal cleanliness of life, with total abstinence from strong drink as their basis."

Many great men have given testimony to the value of the total abstinence pledge: Abraham Lincoln upon seeing a mother's sorrow and distress because of her son's dissipation, after repeating the words of Shakespeare, "O, God, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains," said to his son, "Taddie, lad, promise me that you will never drink liquor or wine or anything of that sort." Tad nodded and as he placed his hand in that of his father gave his word. A few mements later, the President remarked, "Son, keep that pledge and it will be the best act of your life." Tad kept the pledge.

Another true incident, which occurred in the life of a judge, is related: While quite young, he wanted to go to the city to study law but his father objected. One day the lad decided to run away. He confided his plans to his sistar who told them to her mother. The mother called the son to her room "Oh! how we loved mother's room" said the judge in telling the story. "She talked to me and wanted me to sign the total abstinence pledge and to promise her I would not go without letting her know. I was ready to agree to anything my mother wanted me to."

Soon afterward, he overheard a conversation between his father and mother. The father was saying, "If he goes to the city he will drink and be overcome by temptation." "But John, he has signed the pledge and promised he would not drink. Have you ever broken your promises to me?" "No", was the reply, "I don't think I ever have." "Have I ever broken any I have made to you?" "No." "Well said the mother, "isn't he our son and haven't we a right to expect he will keep his promise?" The boy went away to the city with his father's blessing. He kept the pledge and it was a safeguard through all the years. His life was a success and many young men have gone from his office with the influence of his example of total abstinence abiding with them.

Let us continue to pledge the children and youth to total abstinence, thus winning them for our cause.

See Beets As Safe Crop For Michigan

That sugar beets look like a pretty safe crop for many Michigan farmers to tie to, after consideration of production and market factors which are already known, is the opinion of Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the farm crops department at the M. A. C.

"In spite of the fact that this has been an unusual year for the preparation of seed beds for sugar beets", says Professor Cox, it is apparent that the acreage will not quite equal that of last year, unless more farmers in the next week or so conclude that beets are a safe crop.

"Apparently some have been deterred from planting due to announcements of large reserves of sugar abroad and comparatively low priccs prevailing at the present time. It should be kept in mind the per capita consumption of sugar has increased in the past five years in the United States from 85 to 125 pounds per person, and also that the sugar beet acreage of the great western sugar producing states is much less this year, due to serious inroads of nematodes and beet diseases in western states last year. The European acreage is also reported to be lower. Present reserves will rapidly melt away.

"Contracts are being offered Michigan farmers for sugar beets this year similar to those of the past year, with a minimum of $7 a ton assured growers, and increase above that based on sugar prices. Great elements of risk that occur to other field crops do not exist in the case of beets. Labor conditions have improved, and there will be plenty of labor available to sugar companies to fulfill their part of the contract in growing the beet crop, as well as more labor for farmers. Should we have another cold wet summer and fall, the beet crop would thrive under such conditions, while corn and beans would be injured.

"Beans, beets, and potatoes have been a great three horse team for Michigan farmers. Best results will be secured if they are kept pulling evenly in the harness; in other words it is not advisable to plant too large an acreage of beans and potatoes at the expense of the beet crop where these crops compete. Just at present the sugar beet crop is lagging a little.

"Considering the facts that a guarantee is offered, and that Michigan soil and climate are ideal for this tariff protected crop, are not beets, under the present conditions a most dependable crop to tie to."

She lit her lamp, but her fingers slipped over the glass, and it fell to the floor with a crash that startled all the echoes in the old building. The smoky wick flared up. Joan turned it down with difficulty until the blaze was extinguished, and staggered to the bed, amazed at her weakness.

She could not keep her eyelids open, and she let them close wearily. But sleep was far from her, and still she listened. And after while an unmistakable sound reached her. Somewhere within the institute she heard a key turn in a lock.

It was the slightest distant sound, but it cut the darkness like a knife. And to her mind, the sound, which might mean nothing, might be, indeed, the key of Lancaster's door, seemed like the snap of a trap.

She slept and could not waken. Or, rather, she did not sleep, could not have slept; yet sleep had paralyzed her limbs and left her brain untouched; and her mind seemed preternaturally acute, so that she felt and saw everything that was happening in the building.

Someone was coming along the passage, as on that night before. The hand was upon the door. Through her closed and paralyzed eyelids Joan yet seemed to see the figure of a madwoman. Something was in her hand. It was the revolver which Joan had left upon the little table beside her.

Mrs. Dana stood over her, the weapon aimed at her, while her eyes sought her face.

Was she dreaming? Joan had waited through agony of centuries, and the woman was gone. Once more there was silence everywhere. And still she lay there, helpless, feeling all and knowing all, and that it had been no dream, but the prelude of worse to come.

It was strange, but she did not once picture Lancaster as in danger. It was as if the unchained spirit of evil, impotent to harm him, sought another victim. She waited, it seemed for aeons. And the the blow fell.

She heard a man's scream of fear, dinned through her ears distantly, with the accompanying pistol shot. Yet she was unable to stir, and it passed into her memory, as of something infinitely long ago. Presently there came the hum of voices, chattering cries, bare feet that ran wildly along the corridor without, hands at her door.

It was Mrs. Fraser's voice. Now, with a mighty effort, Joan shook herself free from the spell. She staggered from the bed and groped her way across the room.

Nobody was at the door now, but when she unlocked it a whirl of smoke burst in. Smoke filled the passage. Upon the floor beneath a woman was screaming. There were voices outside, and the sound of men running along the passages, but Joan could not locate them.

She staggered through the smoke, feeling for the stairs. It blinded her. She fell into a wall, felt a rigid body before her, and perceived dimly Mrs. Dana's face, wearing a look of exaltation.

She had come too far; she had reached the door of Mrs. Dana's room. Through a break in the smoke cloud Joan saw that the door was closed. Behind it someone was hammering. Then Myers' screams broke through the din and confusion. He was battering against the door, and the strong door, built to resist such pressure, refused to yield. His cries were terrifying. Under the door came little creeping tongues of flame.

Joan caught at Mrs. Dana. "Come with me!" she mumbled. "Come!"

The woman stood rigid as a statue. She felt like marble to the touch, but there was the same exaltation upon her face.

"Open the door!" whispered Joan with her last strength, and pointed. "Open it! Somebody is locked inside."

Myers was yelling as Joan had once heard a horse yell, trapped in a burning stable. The wood of the door was smoldering. Joan tried to reach the key. But the rigid body barred her way.

Then she heard her name called through the smoke. At the cry Mrs. Dana snatched the key from the lock and began to run along the corridor. Joan saw her dimly through the enwrapping smoke. She staggered, and fell into Lancaster's arms.

That was her last effort. Incapable of speech, she felt him bear her along the passage, where the smoke clouds were now shot through with streaks of flame. They thickened about her. Lancaster was carrying her down the stairs now, while hungry flames sprang at them from the walls and floor. He was staggering drunkenly when they reached the hall below.

He placed her on the grass, and plunged back into the flames. The institute was ablaze, fire streamed from the roof and windows. A group of villagers, clustered upon the lawn, looked on helplessly. Joan saw Jenkins, leading the matron, approaching her. She tried to tell him that Lancaster had gone back; she could not speak, but he understood her.

"The doctor's safe," he said, and as he spoke Joan saw Lancaster among a group of men who had gathered about something wrapped in a blanket.

He rose and came to her. That was all Joan remembered.

* * * * * * *

And for days and nights her memories of the past were cut short with Lancaster's return that night, borne back by the power of her love flung across the miles between them. She knew that he lived, and as the nightmare of the end filtered into her mind there came with it the sense of an abiding peace, as if the past was dead, with all its terrors.

Sometimes she felt that Lancaster was beside her; but when at last complete consciousness returned Joan found herself in bed in a strange house. Through the windows she could see the outlines of the familiar mountains, gilded in the red sunset glow against the blue of the sky. Beside her sat a figure which seemed to be so remotely of the past that it was difficult to refrain from laughing at the incongruity of the sight.

"That's right, Miss Wentworth," he said heartily. "Now you've rounded the corner, and I reckon the lane lies straight before you."

"The doctor did not steal that money," murmured Joan weakly.

Jenkins laughed as if her words amused him immensely. "Why, Miss Wentworth, you've been saying that to me every time you woke these five days past," he said, "but I couldn't ever get you to tell me how you knew it."

"I don't remember saying it before," said Joan.

"I reckon you've been pretty weak, Miss Wentworth. But tell me now how you know it."

"I don't know. Why, yes, of course I do. Doctor Lancaster couldn't steal anything. Where is he?"

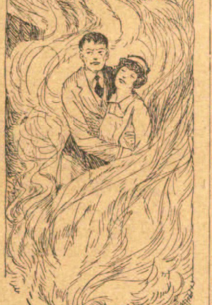
"I'll fetch him, Miss Wentworth. He wants to see you; he's been sitting beside you for days waiting till you really woke up."

"I'm not burned, Doctor Jenkins?" asked Joan in alarm.

"Not the least little bit, Miss Wentworth. I'll bring you a mirror."

"No, I take you on trust. What made me so ill, Doctor Jenkins?"

The doctor hesitated. The old obstinate look began to close down on his features. But Joan caught him by the arm ingratiatingly.



She Staggered and Fell Into Lancaster's Arms.

"Come, now, tell me," she said. "Did he—did he inject morphine into me?"

"No, Miss Wentworth," said Jenkins, unable to hold out. "It wasn't morphine. It was curare—the stuff that paralyzes the motor nerves without destroying consciousness." His face grew somber. "It doesn't leave traces, as morphine does, and that devil had put it into morphine bottles and made the doctor think he was a morphine fiend. They hoped to kill him more quickly, but somehow he got used to it, and I guess they were at their wits' ends when you came along. But I'll call the doctor, Miss Wentworth."

When he was gone Joan lay back on her pillows, looking out into the mountains. She knew what had occurred that night; in her drugged state she had seen the whole dreadful picture: Myers unlocking Mrs. Dana's door and leading her to her own room, where she had obtained the revolver; her journey to Lancaster's room, bent on her dreadful mission; the murder of Lawson, in the room opposite, instead, for reasons which would never be known, but were certainly providential.

She saw further, by the same intuition which told her that it had been Mrs. Dana's body wrapped in the blanket upon the lawn. Myers, knowing her to be drugged, and believing Lancaster dead, had waited in Mrs. Dana's room and given her the matches, on her return, with which to start the fire, hoping thus to make sure of his victims and cover up his tracks. And he had fallen into the trap he had baited. Strong as he was, there must have been a stronger Power fighting him with Mrs. Dana's arms that night, when she turned the key in the lock and left him to die as he had willed Joan should die.

But Joan knew that no word of this would ever pass between Lancaster and her. And indeed, as she lay back and looked across the fields toward the mountains, she felt that something had turned that page, so that it had become not only of the dead past, but unreal in a way, and only the present peace existed.

She heard a quick step without. Lancaster stood in the doorway, came toward her, kneeled at her side and took her hands in his. And with that even the memories of the past became tenuous, half forgotten.

"Dear, it has come true," he said tenderly.

She lay happily in his arms, looking out all the time toward the sunset on the hills. There was so little to say, because their lives were only beginning.

"I don't want to go back to Avonmouth," she said at length.

"Nor I, Joan. This is our country."

"It must always be our country. But—but the fight, John?"

"I have stolen a march on you, my dear," he answered gayly. "I have fought out my fight while you were ill. I have resigned from the hospital; nobody guesses anything there; and I have convinced the trustees here, by my appearance, and by the presentation of certain papers happily discovered after the fire, that I am a responsible, moral person, honest enough to head the new institute which we are going to build—guess where!"

She looked at him. Then—

"That village in the mountains," she cried happily. "Where our lives really began. I could not wish for anything better."

"And the patient is going to be our porter. And Doctor Jenkins will be house surgeon, resident, with his wife—Joan, he didn't tell you about Mrs. Fraser? Jenkins! Jenkins!" His voice rang through the little house. "Come in at once and face the fire like a man, instead of slinking away into your consulting-room, you ruffianly young benedict!"

[THE END]

The Marriage Problem

You can no more make yourself keep on loving some one to order than you can make yourself fall in or out of love with some one to order. It's like asking a small boy to light a street lamp with only a match. He can't reach—the whole thing's beyond him. That's the tragedy—the whole relationship is dependent on something that sails as airily remote above your head as a drifting cloud. To base on that an irrevocable agreement? It's simply asking for trouble. It's like jumping into ten feet of water without knowing whether you can swim or not, and then complaining because you're drowned.—From "The Marriage-Craft," by D. H. S. Nicholson.

Throw Out the Life Line

Just before the conclusion of the weekly prayer meeting in a country town one evening the parson arose, and glanced over the congregation.

"Is there anybody present," said he, "who wishes the prayers of the congregation for a relative or a friend?"

"Yes, parson," answered a tall, angular woman, rising to her feet. "I want the congregation to pray for my husband."

"Why, Sister Martha," exclaimed the parson, with a surprised expression, "you have no husband."

"I know I haven't," was the calm rejoinder of Sister Martha. "I want all hands to pitch in and help pray for one."

One of those dinosaur eggs being served in a restaurant.

Telephone to Teach Better Enunciation

Men who are trying to improve telephone service believe that the telephone will teach its users to speak clearly—not with one conversation, but in the course of time. And, certainly, business would be expedited with perfect enunciation over the telephone. Even a simple name like Dix, say, when passed over the wires may become almost anything—and then it is spelled for verification, thus: "D for Dan, I fo. Ike, X for X-ray"—words as difficult as the one to be understood.

Progress in plain talking does seem to lag, in the opinion of The Nation's Business. Any optimism in that direction is blighted by the hash in our daily speech. Ideas seem to have transmission as much by telepathy as by telephony. "Wassatyugottado t'nightLuh?" But a jumble of letters will make sound and so may give a message to sophisticated ears. The eye is more expert than the ear at registering words. Whoever was fooled by the blanks in the penny dreadfuls of the long ago? The d——s were promptly accepted at their full brimstone content, but a curse by telephone might easily be garbled into a compliment. It's a wise ear that knows its own tongue.

It Happened in Boston

There had been a visitor, and to the lad she said: "And so this is little Walter? My, my! What a big boy you've grown to be! I wouldn't have believed it possible."

"Mother," said Walter when the visitor had gone, "doesn't it pass your comprehension how persons in whom one would naturally expect an ordinary degree of intelligence appear to believe, all history and nature to the contrary notwithstanding, that the children of their acquaintance will always remain infants, and persist in expressing surprise when they observe the perfectly natural increase in one's stature?"—Washington Star.

Not Suited to It

Mrs. Keyhammer—Don't you like my playing? You know, "Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast."

Her Husband—Mebbe it hath. I s'pose I'm not savage enough.

POULTRY

FACTS OF POULTRY WORTH REMEMBERING

The poultry producers who do not give their flocks the run of the farm have a problem of yard management to consider in the handling of their flocks. Where the poultry have the run of the farm this problem is not so important, but, instead, the producer has the problem of keeping the ground immediately adjacent to the houses in a sanitary condition.

It has been demonstrated in all classes of live stock that rotation of pastures is an important means of lessening disease. This has been recognized for many years in the management of sheep and is becoming more recognized in the handling of hogs under the system which is known as the McClean county system.

In the handling of poultry it is well to have double yards so that one might rotate green crops. The yards may be sown to rye, oats, wheat or any quick-growing crop and while the fowls are using one yard the green feed in the other is getting a fresh start.

If the yards are only on one side of the house it is preferable that they be on the south side in order that the birds get the benefit of the dry ground and the warm sun in the early spring.

If the yards are in permanent sod it usually requires from 70 to 80 square feet for each bird. If part of the green feed is supplied in other forms half of this amount will be sufficient.

Shade of some type is needed in the poultry yards. Fruit trees are often used for this purpose. If trees are not available then some type of artificial shade should be supplied.

Select the best eggs for hatching.

Use the mother hen when possible or hatch early chicks with incubators.

Care for early hatched baby chicks well.

Feed early baby chicks properly to give them a good start.

It is always well to clean and disinfect the houses and pens thoroughly where the pullets are to live. This is especially true if the birds formerly occupying the building have been diseased or have had worms.

Artificial lights should not be used on pullets until they have had a chance to respond to normal conditions. If they do not respond quickly enough, or if neck molt starts, then lights can be used with good effect.

Lack of ventilation causes dampness in the houses and this in turn results in colds and roup.

Sunlight a Panacea for All Kansas Hen Flocks

"Why use the ultra-violet ray machine or cod-liver oil to stimulate egg production when Kansas sunlight is so available?" asks Prof. L. F. Payne, head of the department of poultry husbandry at the Kansas State Agricultural college.

Experiments at the college have indicated that a vital element for egg production and for general vigor of poultry is provided by sunlight, by the ultra-violet ray, or by the vitamine contained in cod liver oil, and that if this element is lacking improper development results.

Professor Payne has conducted experiments which indicate that direct sunlight is more beneficial than that which comes through ordinary window glass. In an experiment contrasting egg production of pullets grown in an open house with those grown in a glass-front house the ones grown in the open house were heavier producers and had no trouble with colds or molting, while those in the glass-front house suffered from colds and from molting.

Palatability of Feeds Appreciated by Fowls

A hen does not have a keen sense of taste, but she does dislike certain feeds, and if they make up an appreciable part of the mash she will reduce the quantity eaten. Linseed meal, bean meals and ground hulls must be used only to a limited extent. Blood meals, rye and cottonseed meal should be left out of the ration. Wheat bran and millet are probably the best-liked fibrous feeds. Light colored mashes are usually eaten more readily than dark ones.

Undoubtedly hens or flocks develop individual likes and dislikes. Birds raised on kafir, for instance, may like it, while another flock to which it is newly introduced may practically refuse to eat it. Hens do not enjoy feed or eat as heartily when it must be dug out of a filthy litter.—O. C. Krum, Colorado Agricultural College, in Extension Bulletin 234-A, "Feeding for Commercial Egg Production."

Feed for Young Chicks

The young chicks should not be fed until they are 48 hours old, whether they are with hen or in a brooder. The first feed should consist of baked johnny-cake broken up into small pieces, or hard-boiled eggs mixed with stale bread crumbs or rolled oats, using a sufficient quantity of the latter to make a dry, crumbly mixture or a mash of two quarts of rolled oats, one part bran and one part middlings by weight, mixed with milk or with boiled eggs.

Foster-Mothers Best

Many do not consider the goose an ideal mother. Usually it is best to let chicken hens do the hatching and rearing. In this way more goslings can be raised, as after the goose has laid a clutch she can be broken of the desire to set by confining her a week. At the end of two weeks she will begin to lay. Toward the end of the season she may be allowed to hatch a brood and raise them. It is a hard task to handle a setting goose.

Everybody Knows That

Excerpt from the diary of Mr. Robert Leroy Ripley, the cartoonist of sport:

"This morning I am in great trouble. Mrs. Whilliger has just called me up to say that I owe her a hat.

" 'You know,' she chirped, 'you lost that bet to me.'

"We had bet upon the nationality of a dark young man. She said that he was an Italian, and I said he was not.

" 'But I asked him,' she said over the phone, 'and he said he is a Rumanian, and every one knows that Rumanians come from Rome.'

"What'll I do?"

Learning Early

Fair lady in distress always arouses the chivalry of man, but not often does a seven-year-old girl realize this. A child of this age was sent by her mother to return some candy she had bought against the parental order. She came home to her mother, the money in her hand, and crying. "I knew if I cried I'd get the man to take the candy quicker," she explained to her mother.—Detroit News.

E. W. Werner In The Theatre Game

Intelligence received from our old townsman, E. W. Werner, at Kansas City, states that he is to erect a new $150,000 theatre and moving picture house on the site of the present one of which he has been proprietor for the past few years. The lot has been leased for a term of 95 years by Mr. Werner who will at once begin work with a night and day shift of workmen· It is estimated that four months will be required to put the new building in shape for use. Dimensions will be, depth 235 feet, width 60 feet. This will comprise one of the most up-to-date houses in the middle west. Orchestra pit will accommodate 40 players, the main auditorium 1,500 and the entire house 2,200 spectators.

The most unique feature of the house will be a baby room or "cry room" as Mr. Werner designates it, in the rear, where mothers with crying babes may retire and witness the show through two sound-proof plate-glass walls. Other features are an air circulating and cooling system, a grand lighting system of multi-colors (3 colors.) Mr. Werner will pay an annual rental of $8,000 for ten years, and after that $8,500 per year.

The special conferences, called in recognition of the anniversaries and to plan program for the future include: Conference on Engineering Education and the relation of the College to the industries of the state—May 13 and 14. Glenn Cowell to Replace Arthur Williams

We have been importuned to recommend W. Glenn Cowell, a lawyer of Coldwater, as an able successor to Arthur B. Williams. We never recommend those we don't know, more especially in politics. Some investigation will have to be made. We never heard of Cowell but suppose he is a would-be, and probably qualified more or less. Would suggest that he don his 40-league boots if he expects to cover the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor.

Adams Township Wind-Swept

The first serious storm of the season struck Adams township on Saturday afternoon last, about 4 o'clock when the barn of Mark Caskey on the angling road was seriously damaged and one side blown out. The storm swept forward to Wid Pool's farm and a large new barn was moved two feet off its base. thence to the residence of Charles Williams where it ripped off shingles. Roaring on it leveled shade and fruit trees and plunged into the silo of John Gordon leaving it and the hen house a wreck. Parts of the silo flew over the house and the chimneys were toppled over.

The course of the storm was almost due east, and in places it plunged through timber, making sad havoc. The next place struck was the farm of Mrs. Elta Schilling where a barn was torn to pieces and parts of the roof carried 80 rods. Here three horses were buried in the debris, two instantly killed. Tools housed in the barn were smashed and front porch and chimneys damaged on the residence. The renter, Mr. Haynes, was in the path of the storm which picked him up and deposited him in a maple tree. A natural inclination to "grab a root" left him clinging to a limb without much recollection of how it came about. The barn of Will Bloemker was partially unroofed and a number of young chicks were killed. The barn of Henry Porter was also partially unroofed and shade trees leveled. The nearly new barn of Andrew Lindenschmitt stood squarely in the path of the storm and was reduced to debris. Shade trees and everything movable suffered severely wherever the tornado touched.

The paint shop of Mr. Rick in Hillsdale was demolished and the big steel tank unroofed and shade trees damaged in Stock's Park.

So far as we learn nearly all the property was insured. Mr. Haynes had his team insured. Mrs Schilling carried $400 on the barn Mr. Lindenschmitt $1,200, John Gordon had insurance. Telephone connections are so badly mixed that not much can be learned.

In Jonesville hail fell in large quantities.

Evangelist H. G. Hamilton of Warsaw, Indiana, began his second Union Evangelistic campaign here in North Adams last Sunday Fine crowds were present at the opening session which seemed to indicate that the people of North Adams were strongly back of the movement. Mr. Hamilton is known as "the evangelist with a message from God", and to hear him is to be impressed with that fact; he is a bible teacher of merit, and is much used throughout the country in that respect. His evangelistic addresses scintillate with pungent truths from the scripture; he is spiritual, sympathetic and sincere.

Mr. L. A. Wegner of Winona Lake, Indiana, who is associated with him as song director, and whose photo is shown above, is a man of God who is master of the art of getting others to sing. He has on a number of occasions been associated with the great English evangelist, Gypsy Smith. He is a member of the faculty of the Rodeheaver summer school of music of Winona Lake, Indiana. He has a rich deep solo voice with which he endeavors to sing the gospel into the hearts of men and women. He has studied under Dr. D. B. Towner of Chicago and Dr. Williamson of Dayton, Ohio, who is the director of the famous American Westminster choir. If you enjoy good speaking and singing, hear Hamilton & Wegner. They are courteous, contistent, christian gentlemen who are endeavoring to help the people discover their bigger and better self through an acquaintance with God.

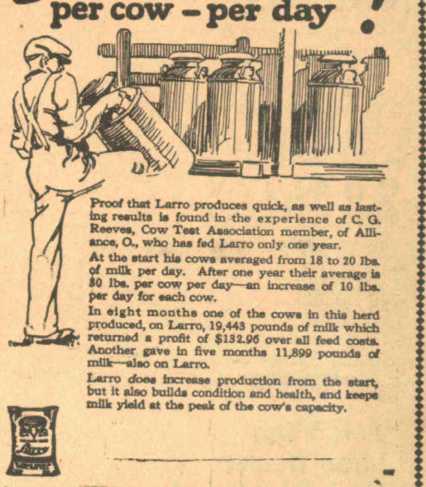
10 lbs. more! per cow – per day!



Proof that Larro produces quick, as well as lasting results is found in the experience of C. G. Reeves, Cow Test Association member, of Alliance, O., who has fed Larro only one year.

At the start his cows averaged from 18 to 20 lbs. of milk per day. After one year their average is 30 lbs. per cow per day—an increase of 10 lbs. per day for each cow.

In eight months one of the cows in this herd produced, on Larro, 19,443 pounds of milk which returned a profit of $132.96 over all feed costs. Another gave in five months 11,899 pounds of milk—also on Larro.

Larro does increase production from the start, but it also builds condition and health, and keeps milk yield at the peak of the cow's capacity.

Recent tests by the United States bureau of mines shows that the wetting of coal is expensive to the consumer. Fine sizes of both bituminous and anthracite will hold up to 20 per cent in moisture. A moisture content of 12 per cent is not at all uncommon.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Port Huron—A revolver cartridge, which had been thrown into the road, was accidentally exploded here by the wheel of a truck. The bullet crashed through a window of the home of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Ashpole. No on was injured.

Lansing—Arbor Day was observed more generally in Michigan this year than ever before, thanks to the gospel spread by the conservationists. Thousands of trees were planted on the premises of school and along highways, in all parts of the state.

Reed City—Reed City definitely has entered the race for the northwestern normal school. Committees have been appointed, options on desirable locations have been secured and every means will be taken to gain the attention of the authorities to get the location here.

Ypsilanti—One thousand more teachers are being graduated from the various normals and colleges of Michigan than can be placed in positions in the state, said Dimon H. Roberts, superintendent of the training school at the Michigan State Normal College here, in an address to the students of the college.

Saginaw—Michigan Council of the Parent-Teacher Association, in annual convention here, is on record for the high school fraternity bill passed by the last legislature and which awaits the governor's signature. The bill provides students may be barred from classes if they join fraternities. About 1,500 persons are attending the convention.

Grand Rapids—The Michigan Retail Jewelers Association, which at the closing session of its annual convention here, became affiliated with the Michigan Retailers Council, elect- J. H. Garlick, Detroit, as president. Detroit pressed an invitation for the 1926 convention, but the city will not be selected by the boad of directors until early next year.

Kalamazoo—Armed with picks, axes and shovels, 70 of Kalamazoo's leading clubmen, invaded the Bow District along the river front to help clear away rubbish and undergrowth. The "bee" was the first step toward conversion of the unsightly "jungles district" into a city park, the 100-acre tract having been purchased a year ago by the city commission for $50,000.

Detroit—Harry S. Cole, clerk of the Wayne Circuit Court, who was suspended by the judges of the court for insubordination in refusing to carry out orders for assignment of cases, was asked to hand in his resignation, Judge Adolph F. Marschner, presiding judge, said. If he fails to resign, Cole's dismissal will be asked of Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck, Judge Marschner said.

Owosso—Owosso policemen, before long, expect to win the reputation for having the neatest appearance of any guardians of the law in Michigan. Police Chief Earl Whiteherse, who took over that office a few days ago, issued his first written order to members of the force. It reads: "Hereafter every police officer in Owosso will at all times have his uniform pressed, his shoes shined, and bo cleanly shaved."

Lansing—Marie Theresa Corby, child heir-apparent to the estate of Thomas W. Corby, won the first round of her fight to keep Corby's nephews and nieces from appropriating the estate when the Supreme Court ruled that she was entitled to name her own administrator. The case was brought here when Corby's nephews and nieces appealed from a Wayne Circuit Court decision whereby the Security Trust Co. was named administrator.

Mt. Clemens—William Watkins, inspector of State Police in Macomb and St. Clair counties, and one of the State's principal witnesses in the grand jury investigation of charges of graft in Mt. Clemens police court circles, was waylaid and shot at by six unidentified men. He was driving to his home, in New Baltimore, when he was attacked. Three shots were fired. One went wild and the others penetrated his automobile. One lodged in the car's frame on a level with his head.

Benton Harbor—Berrien County splashed color all over the map of Michigan when it staged its Blossom Festival. More than 50 floats, many of them buried in blossoms, symbolized the fertility of the Michigan county which is beaten in output only by three states in the Union. The trio which must marshal a whole commonwealth's resources to pass Berrien are Florida and California, with their enormous yield of citrus fruits, and New York, famous for apples and grapes. Benton Harber and St. Joseph, twin cities, joined hands in staging the spectacle.

Cadillac—The village of Sherman, the first county seat of Wexford county, may soon lose its postoffice unless some one is willing to take the job of postmaster. The present incumbent is a woman, Mrs. S. B. Nisewander, who has resigned, as there is not enough money in the office. Sherman, at one time, was a thriving lumber village, but with the passing of that industry the town began to retrograde, this being hastened by the removal of the county seat to Manton and later to Cadillac.

Bay City—Robert V. Mundy, Kasimir Niedzielski and Adam Schepper, former members of the City Commission, who were charge with violating the city charter by the sale, through employes or third parties of quantities of goods to the city appeared in the Circuit Court and pleaded guilty. Investigations carried on by a one-man grand jury, prior to making complaints against the men, brought out, according to the prosecutor, that there was no evidence that the city had been overcharged and Circuit Judge Houghton suspended sentence.

Holland—At the request of the Holland Game and Fish Protective Association, two State chemists have arrived here to examine the water of Black Lake. The association charges that certain factories dump chemical waste and other refuse into the lake making it an uninhabitable place for fish.

Wyandotte—The new charter which will be presented to the city of Wyandotte by its charter commission will provide for government by a mayor and six commissioners and mayor as at present. A proposal to return to the old aldemanic form of government and another to inaugurate a form of the city manager plan of government have been defeated.

Port Huron—Those Detroiters who have been making merry in past seasons during the week end at Fair Haven and other county resorts, will miss their Sunday dancing this year. Sheriff D. Turbin announced that Sunday dancing in St. Clair county is under the ban. Proprietors of dance halls who attempt to operate on Sunday will be arrested, the official stated.

Paw Paw—Charles Langdon, 15-year-old schoolboy, who, according to Sheriff Glenn Weaver, admits shootin Mat Edgotich, a farmer near Decatur, with the object of robbery, was bound over to Circuit Court by Justice W. A. Prafer, following his arraignment on a charge of intent to commit homicide. Edgotich is suffering from the effects of a 22-caliber bullet n his skull.

Pontiac—Plans have been started to condemn property on Willow avenue, from Huron street to Pike street, and also on Garland avenue, as the first steps to opening a through route to divert traffic from the present Detroit-Pontiac highway. At a meeting of the city commission it was decided to open Willow avenue and widen Garland avenue to Orchard Lake avenue.

Ypsilanti—Ypsilanti high school won the debate with Croswell high school and will now debate with Ann Arbor for the state championship. Miss Ruth Latham, Miss Lorinda McAndrew and Charles Hill took the negative side of the question. The judges, heads of the public speaking political science and educational departments of the U. of M., cast a unanimous vote for Ypsilanti.

Flint—Falling nearly 1,000 feet when his airplane nose dived and crashed into an apple tree, Ward E. Fitch, 23 years old, 728 Pierson street, commercial aviator and automobile salesman, was injured fatally while approximately 800 persons who came to witness the exhibition flight lookd on. Fitch died with out regaining consciousness an hour after he was taken to Hurley hospital.

Harrison—This city is trying to get possession of a small island in Budd Lake for development as a park. It consists of 1.4 acres. One of the last acts of President Harding was to sign an executive order withdrawing the island from public entry. It is as yet in that status. Representative Woodruff will introduce a bill next Congress to provide that it may be sold to Harrison or the state of Michigan.

Alpena—"An attempt at piracy," was the expression used by Captain E.G. Rattray, of the package freighter Raleigh, when he docked in Alpena to describe a brush which took place off Harbor Beach when the crew of the big lake tug Favorite attempted to take away from the Raleigh a salvage prize, the scow Niagara, which the Raleigh found adrift and unmanned, menacing navigation off Port Huron.

Ypsilanti—Three prisoners employed on the road building gang stationed here, were returned to the Michigan State Prison at Jackson for creating a disturbance in their quarters. The officers were called to the camp when the disturbance began as it was feared that regular guards would be insufficient to cope with the outbreak. An investigation disclosed that the men had smuggled liquor into the camp.

Battle Creek—Battle Creek's first air circus will be held at the city's new airport Aug. 28, 29 and 30, it was announced. The circus, acording to members of the Chamber of Commerce airport committee, will bring to Battle Creek approximately 50 planes and pilots, including 10 or more from Selfridge Field. Arrangements are being made to bring Capt "Eddie" Rickenbacker, of Detroit American ace, to the circus.

Lansing—Automobile owners who purchased 1925 license plates under the old weight and horsepower system, and who have not remitted if the cost was more under the new weight law, will be deprived of their plates, Charles J. DeLand, secretary of state, said. He ordered the Detroit branch of the Department of State to take the plates from one driver, unless he pays the difference and is checking up others who have failed to pay.

Iron Mountain—Aldermen who play hookey from council meetings will have to report armed with a good excuse for their absence or else suffer the loss of their seats, according to the terms of an ordinance passed by the council. Under the terms of the new measure, aldermen who miss two meetings in succession must account for their absence or be removed from office. The ordinance requires that the city clerk notify any conucilman who has been absent two consecutive meetings by registered mail.

Lansing—New telephone rates for Michigan and particularly the city of Detroit, probably will not be fixed by the public utilities commission until the coming fall, it has developed. The commission's inspectors have completed their appraisal and audit but it is not likely to be ready for the commission's use until June 1. Several weeks of hearings are expected after the new value of Michigan Bell telephone holdings is determined and this is expected to bring the completion of the case sometime late in the summer.

Government's Grand Assault on Demon Rum Hits Land Traffic.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

UNCLE SAM, as represented by the Treasury department, feels that he has rather effectually checked the smuggling of illicit liquor from the rum fleet on the Atlantic coast, and now is going after the land traffic in booze with every agency at his command. President Coolidge is taking an active interest in the crusade for enforcement of the prohibition law and has asked Secretary of the Treasury Mellon to forward it by every available means.

Every dry agent will be employed in the campaign, and the support of the general public is to be sought through posters and bulletins that will be posted throughout the country. This billboard propaganda, setting forth the "curse of intoxicating liquor," is the pet idea of Prohibition Commissioner Haynes and has been approved by his superiors only after long argument. The combination of "bullets and bulletins," it is hoped, will prove doubly effective. Under the supreme command of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrews in directing the campaign are Rear Admiral Billard, commandant of the coast guard; Commissioner Haynes, and E. C. Yellowley, head of the field forces. David H. Blair, commissioner of internal revenue, will give whatever aid is required from his bureau.

Admiral Billard is not letting the public know just now what the dry navy is doing, but it is known that the blockade of the rum-running fleet has proved quite effective. Many of the vessels have departed, and though a few new ones have appeared in the line, so close a watch is kept that very little liquor has reached the shore. The blockaders are aided by batteries of searchlights so powerful that their beams pierce the fogs on which the smugglers had counted. There are current many stories of attacks on the coast guard men and threats against them, as well as of attempts to corrupt them. But the booze runners are not getting far on those lines. Naturally their activities were diverted to a considerable extent to the Great Lakes, but there, too, the dry forces are preparing to combat them. Many more patrol boats will be in commission there and it is not likely that Canada will object to the arming of such vessels.

On the coast of southern California conditions are reported to be bad, from the prohibition point of view. There are only two coast guard cutters there and the smugglers, it is said, are landing between $10,000 and $20,000 worth of whisky every day in the vicinity of San Pedro. The dry officials admit they cannot cope with the traffic except on land.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover in a trade report includes in the invisible foreign trade of the United States for 1924 an item of $40,000,000 of smuggled liquor. This sum is vastly more than is admitted by the prohibition officials but far less than the estimates of the bootleg syndicates.

MAKING public a preliminary report of the Department of Agriculture's investigation into the extraordinary fluctuations in future grain quotations between January 2 and April 8, Secretary Jardine warned all grain exchanges designated as contract markets that they must either put into effect stricter rules looking toward the prevention of price manipulation or else face the probability of further and more stringent legislation governing the trading in futures. By all those concerned the warning was construed as a threat to revoke the charter of the Chicago board of trade as a contract market unless it promptly provided remedies for existing conditions. Indeed, Mr. Jardine already had issued a similar warning to representatives of the Chicago board. The secretary made it plain and emphatic that if that organization wishes to continue to enjoy the benefits derived from its designation as a contract market, it must draft more definite and stringent rules facilitating the operation and maintenance of federal supervision, preventing the development and dissemination of rumors in the nature of false, misleading and inaccurate reports and statements, preventing actual or attempted manipulation or cornering of the markets and discouraging any tendency toward extensive over-speculation.

Mr. Jardine admits that so far the inquiry has not uncovered sufficient proof of manipulation for the obtaining of a conviction, but says the investigation will be continued, with the aid of the Department of Justice, and that if enough proof of guilt is obtained it will prosecute to the limit of the law. He says, however, that he is even more concerned with the larger phase of the question, namely, the development of some method by which repetition of the erratic price changes may be obviated.

President Carey of the Chicago board of trade said action would be taken at once to meet the "constructive suggestions" of Secretary Jardine. Charges of speculative interference with prices already are under investigation by the exchange.

THE International Council of Women brought its quinquennial convention to a close last week after ten days of discussions and resolutions that aroused the ire of many women outside the council. The critics made charges of pacifism and internationalism against the council, and one of the most bitter, Mrs. O. D. Oliphant, national president of the American Legion Auxiliary, asserted that the American delegates had passively permitted the foreign women to run the convention, which she characterized as a "propaganda party." Mrs. Philip N. Moore, president of the National Council of Women, denied this.

"I am at a loss to guess at the reasons for or the purposes of these unfortunate tirades which have been directed against us," she said. "It may be a desire for personal notoriety on the part of the individual critics. It may be a misdirected overflow of patriotism. At all events, the insinuations against our patriotism or loyalty have been unwarranted, unjust and unfair."

In the matter of international peace the chief action of the convention was the adoption of the resolution favoring gradual simultaneous disarmament under the control of the League of Nations. As worded it implied the right of France to arm for security, and for this reason the German delegates refrained from voting.

WELL, Von Hindenburg is president of Germany, and the republic still lives. What's more, the erstwhile leader of the kaiser's armies took the prescribed oath to preserve the constitution and laws of the commonwealth, led the formal cheers for the republic and with three "hochs," and in his brief, well-worded address gave no least intimation that he would like to see the monarchy restored. The ceremony of inauguration was rather simple. The Communists gave it the only exciting touch. As Hindenburg entered they chanted: "Down with monarchism, long live the soviet republic," and marched from the room.

Next day the president received representatives of all the departments of state, and his bearing and talks made an excellent impression. In his conference with Dr. Steiler, secretary of state, the new president came face to face with the difficulties the Germans are facing in fulfilling the Dawes plan. Dr. Steiler defended the directors of the railways from the attacks made in the reichstag and he told how 30,000 more employees will have to go before the railways can come within the budget figures.

"A great part of the payments which Germany will have to make, according to the plans of her war adversaries, will be put on the railways," Dr. Steiler said. "It will call for our whole strength if we are to fulfill the obligations imposed on us. Only if we succeed will the great treasure of the German railways be kept free of foreign influence for Germany. It is not an economic problem, but a national one, that we must solve."

FRENCH operations against the Riffians in the French zone of Morocco are proceeding successfully, though the tribesmen are putting up a stout resistance. Wednesday of last week there was a series of lively battles along a wide front. The French used all branches of the service and drove back the Riffians with heavy loss, relieving all but two of the beleaguered outposts. General de Chambrun, who used to be military attache in Washington and married Nicholas Longworth's sister, is in command of the French forces. With the assurance from the government of large reinforcements, he is preparing to oust the invading tribesmen entirely from the French zone.

FOREIGN MINISTER BRIAND and Finance Minister Caillaux have let it be known that they are in favor of reaching an agreement with the United States on the debt question within fifteen days, and there is great satisfaction felt thereat in Washington. It is understood that Ambassador Daeschner will conduct the negotiations for France. Jean Parmentier, a skilled French financier, has just arrived in this country and it may be he will help. M. Briand thinks the security question can be settled on the five-power treaty basis proposed by Germany, together with another treaty making safe the eastern frontier.

LEON TROTZKY'S return to Moscow is having some interesting results. He has been elected a member of the soviet cabinet and is being figuratively patted on the back by his late foes, who seem to have modified their ideas of relations with the outer world. But a confidential agent of the British government gives out a warning. He says soviet operatives all over the world, and especially in London, Paris and America, have been making use of "Trotzky's return" for purposes of political propaganda. This, and this only, was the actual motive of the triumvirate ruling Russia in bringing back Trotzky to power. By masking Trotzky as an "economic expert"—similar to Joseph Caillaux of France—the Moscow rulers hope to use him to regain absolute control of the army. In the meantime they are spreading the false news that the former army leader has become less radical, hoping it will help them to obtain loans, especially in London and Paris.

GLENN FRANK, editor of the Century Magazine and only thirty-eight years old, has been invited by the board of the University of Wisconsin to become the president of that institution. Mr. Frank is a native of Missouri and received his education in Northwestern and Lincoln Memorial universities. For several years he was assistant to the president of Northwestern.

IN TENNESSEE they are about to try a test case in which an instructor is accused of violating the state law forbidding the teaching of the theory of evolution in state schools. A preliminary hearing of the charges resulted in the instructor's being held to the grand jury. The fundamentalists of the country are intensely interested in seeing that the statute is upheld, and William Jennings Bryan their high priest among the laity, has offered his legal services to the prosecution. He says the scientists of America are "dishonest scoundrels" who are afraid to tell their beliefs and "burrow in the ground and steal away the faith of our children."

DEATH removed last week several notable persons. Among them were Miss Amy Lowell, an eminent American poet and critic and sister of President Lowell of Harvard; Sir Henry Rider Haggard, celebrated English writer of tales of romance and adventure; Herbert Quick, American author and editor; General Mangin, who gained undying fame by his defense of Verdun in the World war; Rt. Rev. Mgr. Charles A. O'Hern, rector of the North American college at Rome, and William F. Massey, premier of New Zealand.

AS HAD been expected, the sentences passed on the two soldiers at Honolulu, convicted of trying to organize a communist league among their comrades, have been greatly reduced. Maj. Gen. W. R. Smith, after reviewing the court-martial proceedings, cut the sentences from 40 and 26 years to three years and one year.

Wild Horse Roundups Planned in Montana

Helena, Mont.—Wild horse roundups, planned under much the same system as is used by some western states for jackrabbit drives, are being organized in several sections of Montana under a law passed by the last legislature.

The law, which was hard fought on sentimental grounds by old-time stockmen and ranchers in the legislature, is designed to rid sections of the state of the small, wild range horses, commonly designated as cayuses, which are considered by stockmen as utterly worthless.

Farmers complain that bands of these horses, when range feed gets poor, sweep down upon the unfenced pasture lands in the agricultural districts, break down fences and damage growing crops.

The live stock department estimates that there are 400,000 head of these wild horses on the Montana ranges.

Under the law county commissioners, upon sufficient petition, may designate a roundup foreman, who organizes the drive, impounds the horses gathered, records their brands, if any, and causes the publication of a notice under which owners may redeem such stock as they wish by payment of a small fee. The remainder are destroyed.

It has been reliably stated that the amount of food consumed by Montana's worthless cayuses would sustain 2,000,000 head of sheep and 800,000 head of cattle annually.

Rapid Word Sending

A new high-speed sending and receiving system for wireless apparatus has been perfected in France by which 6,000 to 8,000 words can be sent an hour. The apparatus is a modification of the Baudot machine. It is operated with five keys which, in different combinations, represent letters. At the receiving end the apparatus prints in plain language.

Why That Bad Back?

Is backache keeping you upset? Feel all tired out—so nervous and dispirited you can hardly keep going? Then look to your kidneys! Your kidneys rid the body of poisonous waste. But if they lag, impurities accumulate and poison the whole system. Then one is apt to suffer backache, stabbing pains, headaches, dizziness, and other annoying kidney irregularities. If your kidneys are sluggish, help them with a diuretic. Use Doan's Pills. They are praised the world over. Ask your neighbor!

A Michigan Case

Mrs. Sophia Willard, 404 Eleanor Street, Kalamazoo, Mich., says: "When I stooped, sharp catches took me across my back and it was hard to straighten. Mornings my back was so stiff and sore I could hardly hobble around. Dizzy spells came on, too. My kidneys acted too often. It didn't take Doan's Pills long to end the trouble."

Smallest Visible Objects

According to Sir William Bragg of London, the tiniest things which the human eye can see are the black spots and patches sometimes visible in soap bubbles. These black areas are so thin that if the soap bubbles could be magnified to the size of the earth and the thickness of the enveloping film increased in proportion, the film would then be only the thickness of a sheet of glass.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

The Purpose And Scope Of The W.C.T.U.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union reaches out into every line of service in the home, social or civic line, and touches every spring of action that can be correlated for humanity's good. Its scope is as wide as the universe and limited only by humanity's need. Its motto, "For God and Home and Every Land," holds within its compass all that makes life worth living. True to its God given mission the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has consistently pursued its "Do Everything" policy whose effectiveness the present status of public sentiment and action amply justifies. The story of its achievements thrills like a bugle blast urging to further conquest.

We have at last reached the goal of National Constitutional Prohibition. Forty six states, ten more than the required number ratified the Federal amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors and the law is now operative. Is the full purpose of the W. C. T. U. thereby accomplished? A survey of present conditions affords sufficient answer to that question.

The brazen attempts made by the enemies of prohibition to nullify the law, to hinder its enforcement and to minimize its good effects serve to emphasize the fact that the organized work of the W. C. T U. must not be abandoned. Prohibition, now a part of Federal law, must be written in the law of individual life, receive the support of the people, and become a fixed principle of action. Years of educational labor stretch before us ere total abstinence is accepted by the masses of the people as the only safe rule of life. Law enforcement must long be stressed ere prohibition will be safe from the assaults of its enemies.

WOMAN LEADER ANSWERS FREE PRESS EDITORIAL

Mrs. William Tilton, Chairman Women's Allied Organizations of Massachusetts, and Nationol Chairman Legislation of the Congress of Parents and Teachers, has sent the following reply to the editor of the Detroit Free Press, who has called for the modification of the Eighteenth Amendment.

"Dear Sir:

"In calling for the modification of the Eighteenth Amendment after a five years' trial, we would like to ask you frankly where the reforms of the world would have been if your spirit had animated the reformers,—your speed spirit.

"The United States abolished the slave trade, 1807. In 1810, Madison was calling on the nation to put down the illicit traffic. In 1817, Monroe was calling for more enforcement laws. In the thirties, the illicit traffic blazes into 200,000 slaves smuggled across annually.

"But in 1871, we find in our Congressional Record the last act against the slave trade. You see it took more than five short years after the prohibition slave law was passed to enforce it. It took two generations!

"Take again our Constitution, 1787. It made us a nation, on paper. Then came the struggle to enforce the law. Washington died in 1799, in despair that the Constitution would ever become a working reality. John Marshall took up the fight against de-centralization and for federalism. He died in 1835, in despair that we should ever become a nation. But we came through despite the Doubting Thomases and the men who saw more money in local option than in nationalism.

"But it took more than five years to come through. You and I like to think we should have had the staying power to see these glorious reforms through, that fifty years rather than five years would have been the length of our vision.

"Detroit Free Press,—May I ask you would any great reform have come to pass had five years been the limit given in which to bring the unconvinced minority up to the new ideal and work out all the intricacies of enforcement?

"I ask you,—would your attitude have lost or gained for us the abolition of the slave trade or the establishment of our republic?

"Detroit Free Press—read a little history, think a little longer, probe a little deeper, and comback to the ranks of those who enlist, not for five years, but for the duration of the war."

"Sincerely,
(Signed) "Elizabeth Tilton."

State College Looks Ahead at Conference

The M. A. C. reviewed the past and the Michigan State College of Agriculture and Applied Science took a long look into the future during a series of special anniversary conferences held at East Lansing last week.

May 13 was Founders Day at the college, and this year it marked a number of "even number" anniversaries: the 70th of the act establishing the college: the 40th of the start of engineering; the 30th of the establishment of the home economics division and of the start of a system of Farmers Institutes; and the 10th anniversary of the inauguration of the present extension system, supported by the state college and the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

May 13, 1925, also marked the official change in the name of the college from "Michigan Agricultural College" to the "Michigan State College of Agriculture and Applied Science." The conference commemorated the various anniversary dates and recognized the name change officially.

Of greater significance to the state as a whole (particularly the rural sections) than the review of past, was the long look into the future taken by the delegates to the various conference meetings. Led by President Kenyon L. Butterfield and the deans of the various divisions, the college took stock of its entire field of work and planned programs for future development.

Particularly in the fields of rural life betterment and continuing education (for those out in the state who are not attending schools and colleges), the conferences brought out notes of interest and hope for the future.

Many leaders in the various fields of education by the different conferences were gathered from all over the country to take part in the discussion and help plan the general program upon which the M. S. C. will build its educational facilities for the future.

County normal schools of the state will gather at the M. S. C. on May 21 and 22 for the ninth annual county normal conference at East Lansing. Picnics, a singing contest, addresses by leading educators, and various meetings and demonstrations will feature the conference. The Boys and Girls Club Department of the college will serve as hosts during the meetings.

Disease Hits Clover From Imported Seed

Disease is causing heavy loss in the plats sown to seed from Italy and other southern European counties, while the native seed stocks have produced crops which are coming through relatively clean. These plats were sown during the spring of 1924, during which season more than 24 million pounds of clover seed were imported into the United States, approximately three fourths of which came from Italy and France, according to Prof. C. R. Megee, associate professor of farm crops at M. S. C.

The cold, dry weather experienced so far this spring is not particularly favorable to the spread of such diseases as anthracnose, says Professor Megee. Nevertheless, the seed imported from Italy and other southern European countries due to its very high susceptibility has been greatly injured by this disease of our trial plats.

In order to insure healthy, vigorous stand of red clover, only home grown seed should be sown.

Early Laying Pullets Pay Best Institute Finds

The earlier she lays the quicker and longer she pays, says the Blue Valley Creamery Institute in urging Michigan poultry raisers to push pullets to early maturity. Experiments show the more rapidly a pullet comes into egg production the greater the number of eggs she will lay the first year.

The widespread belief that early laying stunts the body growth of the pullet is not borne out by tests except in the case of a few individuals, according to the Institute. Data compiled recently shows that White Leghorn pullets which matured in less than six months laid 168 eggs during their first laying year, while pullets requiring seven or eight months to mature only laid 146 eggs. Pullets taking 10 months to mature were even slower in egg production, the eggs laid totalling only 93.

Early maturity of pullets may be hastened by the feeding of mineral elements including the little known and less used iron, the Institute states. The use of a mixture of one pound of sulphate of iron with one ounce of sulphuric acid in two gallons of water will generally result in unusual development in the growing stock. These should be mixed in earthenware jar, thoroughly shaken and allowed to stand for a day or two. Before using it should be stirred and a half pint of the mixture used in three gallons of water put in to fill the drinking vessels.

The "Backbone" of The Senior Class

The Advocate feels justified in reporting the Senior Class theatrical as a big success. From start to finish; from Kate the servant girl so well portrayed by Charlotte Lane, to the dry and Jiggs-like Mr. Easton, father of the family and a sacrifice to the spendthrift tendencies and high brow stuff of his wife, the play was certainly very well executed.

"Pa" Easton with his corns and rather adverse ideas of society was portrayed by Everett Westcott in his usual manner; Mrs. Easton his wife (by the way a regular Mrs Bowser for curtain lectures) and handy with her tongue always got her arguments to the fore and usually triumphed, as most of them do. Frances Young took this character. The incompetent and terribly shy "Willie Scott" who was so soft he believed he was a cipher, was very vividly impersonated in a creditable manner by Theron Randolph.

Willie never would have known what he was good for if it had not been for the timely advice of the charming Miss Woodward whose visits to the fortune teller found her future and she insisted it could find Willie's. Willie being somewhat skeptical hardly dared read his horoscope, but at last when he found he was "buncoed" he did so. Willie is a type of which this world has by far too many.

Naomi Crapser, as the attractive daughter of "Pa" and "Ma" Easton could not have been more demurely attractive and "Willie" was not so different from other young men in admiring her even if she did repudiate his poor spineless behavior.

Paul Wells as Fred Barton, son of the wealthy store keeper, was a typical product of the life he led. Proud, insolent and fancying himself loved by Miss Easton, but really the butt of her ridicule.

Collectors usually lead a hard and stony life, and J. W. Lynch as an installment man was no exception. Besides being impudent and thoroughly scorned, he managed to obtain a very black optic after "Willie" got his second nerve

Ralph Wolcott as Old Man Barton, whose principal aim in life was to "go get 'em"—the dollars we mean—and who wanted not only his clerk's services for half price but also the entire trade of the "Emporium" beside, has many prototypes.

Bernard Shaw, the efficient office boy was very prompt in answering calls.

Miss Thelma Brooks as the charming Miss Woodward who so thoroughly monoplized "Willie's" cupidity deserves more than passing mention.

The daughter of the Easton family just like others, seemed to have a number of friends who usually attended her parties and patronized the punch bowl heavily. These consisted of Clarence Hoffman, Genevieve Roberts, J. W. Lynch, Myrtle Rogers and Ethel Bohn.

Receipts of the entertainment are highly satisfactory and the Seniors are to be congratulated.

Candidate For Congress

George Burr Smith of Somerset Township, Hillsdale county has announced his candidacy for Congress on the Democratic ticket at the special election to be held in the third district. His statement is as follows:

"I have been urged by Republican Dissenters to become a candidate for Congress on the Democratic ticket and promised support if nominated."

"I went into the campaign in 1923 without a dollar except what was contributed by others, who like myself, had been caught with the repudiation of the Federal Reserve Board promises to assist the farmers who had given "until it hurt" to help win the war. It was necessary for me to rent my farm and sell my registered stock and equipment, while the Senate betrayed our boys who gave their lives to end all war. Industry has been exploited and the wealth of the country is being rapidly gathered into the hands of a few, depriving labor of the comforts of life resulting from improved methods of production and toil saving machinery."

"I reduced the Republican majority for Congress from forty eight hundred to six hundred seventy three in Hillsdale county between two regular elections. I am now proud to be recognized here as a "Wheel horse Democrat" but, first of all, I am an American genuinely and deeply concerned for the future of representative Government."

"Any contribution you feel like making will be appreciated.

Beware! How You Address Your Mail

With a view to reducing the large and needless waste occasioned by careless addressing of mail matter, Postmaster General New has directed that an intensive educational campaign be waged during the first week in June to assure better mailing practices and to divert to constructive channels millions now lost, principally through carelessness.

The Department already has been assured the cooperation in this endeavor of many of the nation's large mail users and of business, civic, and fraternal organizations. Twelve thousand moving picture theatres will run the Department's slogans urging greater care in addressing, and it is hoped that newspapers generally will take part by disclosing to their readers the extent of the waste and the way in which it may be eliminated.

Additional articles of interest on the same subject will follow later. Postmasters have been asked to cooperate with editors.

Have You Got your Ear to the Ground?

If you have not then get down right now. We told you recently what was going to be done with the St Lawrence Waterway project. Now it seems the Railroads and Steamship companies are about to put in $4,500,000 to complete a terminal dock on the Detroit River which will cover 12 acres of ground and up to the minute. When the waterway is completed we shall see Detroit go some. None of the great Atlantic seaports will become more important than our own metropolis, I am sure. Now if you will give this a few moments thought you will quickly see the way the wind is blowing. Henry Ford alone has not spent his millions on River Rouge for the fun of it. Not on your tin type! Mr. Ford will live to see River Rouge District fully as great as the Battery of New York City. Ocean traffic will come driving into the port of Detroit and you will in the course of a few years be able to buy spices from a Chinese Junk at the docks of Detroit, you will see a vast multitude of foreigners dressed in all the typical costumes of the Orient; you will hear the hoarse bellowing of the sirens of ocean tramp steamers from the Islands of southern seas, and whalers from the frozen North. Banana steamers from Central America will leave immense cargoes. Copra from the dark continent and dates from the Barbary States can be seen on the wharves in original packages right from the jungle. Just watch and wait. Meanwhile if you have a few stray dollars lying around in the old stocking or drawing four percent better soak it into Detroit real estate somewhere in the down river district. Don't be scared of the rum-runners. They will be taken care of in due season if it requires the whole United States navy to do it. Not so long ago they bewailed the awful flow of liquor into this country from ships but you aren't hearing much about the liquor now—are you? Nope! A few of our real fighting men took a few of the unused torpedo boats which were lying around and in a couple of days they rounded up the whole bunch. You can see how much the boasted millions of gallons of liquid hell which they claimed was coming in, amounted to when the real boys went after it. Make your reservations early and don't forget Detroit property never goes back but always steps one notch ahead. Taxes could not be any higher up there than here and —well you know.

A letter, postcard, parcel, or newspaper, entering the mails is simply a piece of mail.

If, because of inadequate or incorrect address, and in the case of the package improper wrapping a piece of mail must be taken out of the regular postal machinery for "directory service" or "hospital service", it becomes a Nixie.

If the postal sleuths are able to correct the address, or return to sender for a better one, it again becomes a piece of mail—though "delayed mail" is the better sobriquet.

Gentlemen:

While you probably will regard the experience as nothing unusual, you doubtless will be pleased to know that at the Cleveland Retail Grocers Association Annual Food Show a loaf of bread baked from "TOWN CRIER" won the capital prize over about 500 loaves representing probably every high quality flour sold in this territory. Color of crust, whiteness, symmetry of form, flavor and edible qualities were considered by the judges.

Mrs. M. Kupchick, winner of the bread prize, also took second prize in the pie contest. Her crust, made from "TOWN CRIER" was regarded as the best, but the judges decided the amount of filling was insufficient.

We are sending you a list of the splendid flours represented in these contests. To win over them is certainly no inconsiderable credit to the skill of Mrs. Kupchick and the quality of "TOWN CRIER".

Very truly yours,

King Tommy

DEEP-LAID SCHEMES

Tommy Norreys, an Irish curate, invested in German marks and when they went down and kept on going Tommy ran over to Berlin to spend his fast-fading investment. Tommy was a modest soul, so when a gentleman with an English accent approached him in his hotel and called him "Your Lordship," Tommy blinked his bright Irish eyes. But when the head waiter repeated the accusation, as he bowed Tommy to a table, Tommy nearly collapsed.

"Who am I?" Tommy asked himself. "Is it a German jest; am I dreaming, or have I a double?" But before he had time to answer his own questions, he was deep in such a mesh of intrigue as even his Irish imagination never dreamed of.

A little later a very pretty dancer threw him a note which said: "Go back to London and marry Viola Temple." Tommy was intrigued to know who Viola Temple was, but the lovely little dancer held first claim on his attention. So he stayed, thereby greatly complicating the already complicated complications.

"George A. Birmingham" is really an Irish preacher—Very Reverend James Owen Hannay, canon of St. Patrick's cathedral, Dublin—so you may be sure he's portrayed "King Tommy" to the life and made him the lovable hero of a delightful romance in a setting of light comedy.

Part I.—London

—I—

CHAPTER I

I had finished breakfast and was reading the Irish news in the Morning Post. It gave me some pleasure to read the Irish news in the Morning Post in the early part of 1922. The Republicans or the Free Staters had burned my house in County Clare, and I liked being told that such people come to a bad end. The Morning Post told me that every day with emphasis.

Lord Norheys walked in and greeted me.

"Good morning," Uncle Bill. Had a good night? Sleep sound and all that? Chewed up a satisfactory breakfast? What I always say is if a fellow sleeps and eats he's fit for anything."

I am not Norheys' uncle, and my name is not Bill, or even William; but I have known him ever since he was born, and I suppose he has a right to stick to the nickname which he first gave me when he was a child in the nursery. His father, the eighth marquis, was my best friend. He and I and Edmond Troyte, the younger brother, were at Winchester together, and afterward at Oxford. I was godfather to the present marquis.

"Thanks," I said. "I got through the night fairly well and the coffee was quite hot at breakfast."

"I thought I'd inquire," said Norheys, "because what I've got to tell you may give you a bit of a shock. And what I always say is this: unless a fellow is pretty well braced up it's better to let a shock stand over for a day or two."

"I feel as fit this morning," I said, "as I'm ever likely to; so unless your news is really desperate—It's about Miss Temple, I suppose."

Miss Temple—Viola Temple of the advertisement hordings and the picture papers—is a very beautiful lady with a spotless reputation. At that time all London was enthusiastic about her dancing. Norheys was more enthusiastic than any one else. I hoped he did not mean to marry her, but was very much afraid he did.

"Viola doesn't come in at all so far," said Norheys. "Though of course she may later on. No fellow can possibly tell who'll come into what, can he? You might be in it yourself, Uncle Bill, before we're actually through it."

"That," I said, "is extra reason for telling me what it is."

"It's a new stunt of Uncle Ned's."

His uncle Ned—this time a real uncle—is Lord Edmond Troyte, son of the seventh marquis, uncle of the ninth marquis of Norheys, one of our ablest, quite our most sincerely patriotic statesman, at present minister for Balkan affairs. Whatever the "stunt" was, it must surely be safe and decorous if Lord Edmund invented it. So I thought; but I was wrong. I might have remembered that there is a queer vein of adventurousness and daring in the Troyte family. There was a Lord Alfred who made himself a sort of Arab sheik early in the Eighteenth century. Before him there was an Elizabethan Lord Edmund who came back from the Spanish Main with a shipful of gold plate. There was a Lady Elizabeth Troyte who married Prince Boris of Lystria in 1762, and, after a brilliant military career, had her head cut off by the Turks, who were playing about in Lystar at that time. There were others. And that kind of thing, if it is in the blood, is very hard to eradicate.

"Uncle Ned," said Norheys, "wants me to be a king."

Norheys was perfectly right to inquire about my health before he made an announcement like that. A man who had slept badly or who had had no breakfast might have fainted through sheer astonishment.

"A king," I said. "Good gracious! But—he can't possibly have suggested your being a king. King of what? Where?"

"Does seem a bit of a facer just at first, doesn't it, Uncle Bill? But the way to look at all these things is this: Why not? Before you turn it down you ought to say to yourself, Why not? That's what I've been saying to myself ever since Uncle Ned sprang it on me."

"Well," I said, "when you put it that way I can see—I dare say you'd make a fairly good king of some very small country. But I still find it very difficult to believe that your Uncle Ned really proposed it. Did he mention the name of the country?"

"He did; but it's slipped out of my head for the minute. It was the same place where my greataunt Elizabeth went with that mucker of hers one hundred and fifty years ago."

"Lystria," I said. "But—well, of course your Uncle Edmund knows better than I do, but I have an impression that Lystria isn't an independent state any more."

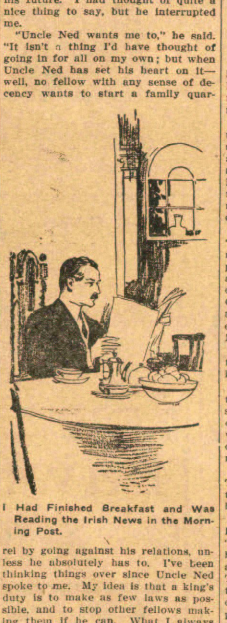
I was right about that. I looked the matter up after Norheys left me. Lystria, once an independent kingdom, was incorporated into the Republic of Megalia by the Treaty of Trianon. Megalia is one of those new republics which make the map of Europe very confusing to people like me who knew it before the war. No doubt the Lystrians deserved to lose their independence. The late king, Wladislaws VI, backed the wrong side in the war and like all who did that, lost his throne.

"Lystria is the spot Uncle Ned mentioned," said Norheys. "Potty little one-horse place; but of course a fellow can't expect to step into a first-rate job when he first goes into the king line of life."

"But," I said, "if you really are to be a king—"

As his godfather I felt it my duty to speak seriously to Norheys about his future. I had thought of quite a nice thing to say, but he interrupted me.

"Uncle Ned wants me to," he said. "It isn't a thing I'd have thought of going in for all on my own; but when Uncle Ned has set his heart on it—well, no fellow with any sense of decency wants to start a family quarrel by going against his relations, unless he absolutely has to. I've been thinking things over since Uncle Ned spoke to me. My idea is that a king's duty is to make as few laws as possible, and to stop other fellows making them if he can. What I always say is this: Most fellows are all right if you leave them alone and don't go trying to make them do things they don't want to. Of course if they take to batting each other on the head, then you've got to send a policeman to stop them. But otherwise—Well, my idea of kings and presidents and people like that is that they've far too good an opinion of themselves. They always think they know what's best and want the other fellow to do it. Whereas the other fellow knows really just as well as they do. And my idea is: Let him. So long as it doesn't annoy anybody else much, let him."



I Had Finished Breakfast and Was Reading the Irish News in the Morning Post.

Norheys' political principles struck me as sound. I felt that, if ever he became king of Lystria, I should like to go and live there. Taxes ought to be light; for the greater part of our national income seems to go in paying officials to compel people to do things they don't want to. There would be no expenditure of that sort in Lystria under Norheys.

"There's another fellow in this stunt," he said, "besides Uncle Ned. Ever hear of any one called Cable?"

"I've heard of Procopius Cable," I said. "Everybody has."

"I haven't," said Norheys. "At least I hadn't until yesterday. What sort of a bird is he?"

I found it a little difficult to give a clear account of Procopius Cable. Nobody knows where he came from. His Christian name sounds Greek, and I have heard it said that he was originally a Levantine Jew. I could not call him a captain of industry, for he does not manufacture, nor drive other people to manufacture, anything. I suppose he might be described as a financier. I said so to Norheys.

"Anything to do with oil?" he asked.

"Not that I know of," I said, "but he may. It wouldn't surprise me to hear that Cable had something to do with anything in the world if there's money to be made out of it."

"I mentioned it," said Norheys, "because Uncle Ned said something about oil in Lystria. I can't say I much like the idea of living in a place that stinks of paraffin, nasty stuff, always getting into your food and dripping about. However, Uncle Ned says the good old British empire wants oil, and if it does I'm all for its having as much as it can get. That's what I always say to a fellow who starts talking about the empire: The proper thing is to let the British empire get what it wants with the least possible fuss, whether it's oil, or rubber, or whatever the thing may be. Uncle Ned seemed to think that in this case it was oil."

"Is there oil in Lystria? I never heard of it."

"That fellow Cable seems to have said so," said Norheys, "and I rather gather—mind you, I'm not saying this as a certain, sure thing. My general impression is that if I was king of Lystria, Uncle Ned and the jolly old empire would collar the oil? See?"

I began to see.

CHAPTER II

I took the first chance I got of having a chat with Edmond Troyte. He was perfectly frank with me and told me all about the scheme for making his nephew king of Lystria.

He began with the political part of the plan. The Lystrians are, so he said, an intensely patriotic people and they very much dislike being merged in the Republic of Megalia. In fact, Edmund admitted this to me, the framers of the Treaty of Trianon made a mistake, a bad mistake, in depriving Lystria of its independence.

"They are a people," said Troyte, "with a strong feeling in favor of monarchy. They don't like the republican form of government. The aristocracy doesn't like it. The Church doesn't like it, and in Lystria the Church counts for a lot. Whatever the patriarch says the people say after him. The patriarch's name is Menelaus."

He went on to tell me that the Lystrians would like to have their old king back.

"But that's impossible. The Entente powers wouldn't stand it. Besides, that fellow Wladislaws is a bad one. He treated his wife badly, she was an Englishwoman. As a matter of fact, she was a distant cousin of my own."

Any king who treats a relative of Troyte's badly deserves to lose his throne. I saw at once that Wladislaws had irretrievably lost his.

"The Patriarch Menelaus and the Lystrian aristocracy," said Troyte, "know perfectly well that they can't have Wladislaws back. So, some time ago, they asked for an Englishman. The only condition they made was that he should marry the ex-king's daughter. Of course we turned the proposal down at once and no more was heard of it."

"You seem to have turned it up again," I said. "Now, why?"

That, it appeared, is where Procopius Cable came in. He had found out that the Lystrian mountains were full of oil. He tried to get a concession for the development of the oil fields. The Megalian government hesitated and wrangled and procrastinated until Cable got tired of trying to deal with them. They had not money enough to develop the place themselves. They had not the knowledge or enterprise or energy to do it even if they had the money. And they would not let Cable do it. So he started working up patriotic feeling in Lystria, or rather financing it, for it did not need working up. He got into touch with the patriarch and he got into touch with the aristocracy through a certain Count Istvan Casimir. He gave them all the money they wanted. According to Cable's account everything was ready for a revolution. All that was wanted was a king whom the Entente powers would recognize. The Megalian republic would be quite helpless if England or any other great power recognized the new king of Lystria.

> My word! What next? With such clever and influential schemers at work, anything is possible.

Sleep-Walking Traced to Disordered Brain

The researches of a group of scientists recently have thrown some light on the dark subject of sleep-walking.

They have found that sleep is a more or less willful turning away of the senses from the demands of life—because at the moment these demands cannot be satisfied.

When we are weary all our senses—all our nerves—are so played out that they "turn away from life" at the same moment. The brain, so to speak, goes to sleep in a lump.

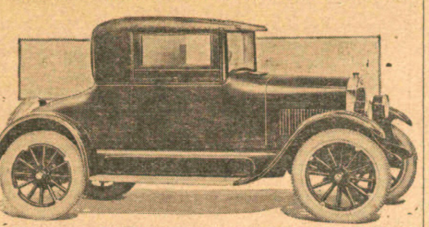
It happens occasionally that a part of the brain is poisoned by disease, whereas the rest of the organ remains healthy. When the healthy parts fall asleep the excited, or poisoned parts, remain wakeful.

In the case of the sleep-walker, that part of the brain which controls the movements of the legs is awake, while the eyes and ears are sound asleep.

In other words, the sleep-walker is suffering from partial brain poisoning.

The idea that sleep-walkers should not be wakened is a mistaken one. Experience shows that if they are roused to an immediate sense of their situation they are more likely, on future occasions, to waken themselves.

STRIKING FEATURES OF NEW STAR COUPSTER



Flexible door windows that may be lowered or raised like pullman car curtains and that disappear within the top of the body when raised are a striking feature of the new Star coupster.

In reality the coupster is a convertible car, affording all the comforts of closed car transportation, yet convertible into an open car by the simple expedient of raising two disappearing windows—a five-second operation. For all practical purposes it is two cars in one.

EFFICIENCY AND SAFETY OF CARS

It is difficult to believe that the oil pressure gauges and the ampere-meters which now appear on the instrument boards of virtually all makes of cars were once regarded by many as unnecessary frills. Today there are a number of accessories being offered which are similarly regarded, which is the same as saying that they would be appreciated if only their advantages were better known.

By equipping a car with some of these fitments, greater satisfaction, efficiency and safety will result. Add front and rear bumpers to the car, attach one of the many rear signaling devices, keep a set of anti-skid chains handy and the car will be enormously benefited in proportion to the cost of the protection. Frequently such safety devices add to the car's appearance and thus not only help protect the owner's original investment, but add to it. A spotlight attached to the windshield and played upon the road may prevent wrecking the car in a ditch.

Take efficiency as another instance. A car that is operated without proper regulation of the cooling system is at all times running inefficiently. This is especially true in winter when the engine is constantly operated at the wrong temperature, either boiling over because the radiator is covered with the lap-robe or running cold because there is no covering at all. The market now offers several radiator covers with openings which can be operated from the dash.

Along the efficiency line are other devices which are destined to filter the gasoline before it is admitted to the carburetor, thus preventing the entrance of dirty or watered gasoline to the carburetor or engine. A device of this character may pay for itself within a month after it is installed.

Then there are shock absorbers, which in addition to giving greater riding comfort, save the springs from breakage on the rebound and thus increase the usefulness of the car by preventing breakdowns. Even cutouts which were at one time regarded as toys for the speed maniacs are now shown to have a very important use.

Regardless of the selling points of each accessory or all of them as a group, it is a fact that any one of them adds to the second-hand value of a car. So the motorist not only has the use of the accessories with which he equips his car and the savings on insurance, inconvenience, repair bills, etc., but he gets a return premium when he goes to sell the car.

Good Advice Is to Give Machine the Once-Over

There's economy, also satisfaction in giving your car the once-over in the spring, then if it needs replacements or anything else to bring it back to perfect form, have it done as quickly as possible.

Naturally the toll of a year's driving is most severe, and generally there is a reminder or two. Right here the old stitch in time principle works out. When the car is restored to its best shape, almost as good as the day it was bought, riding in it is far more enjoyable, also it will bring a much better price if you care to sell or expect to trade it in on a new car.

Letting your motor car run down is false economy. Eventually it costs you more and in the interim you are not happiest when riding along the highways.

Even little things which you may think are of no special consequence develop into big items in repair bills if allowed to run on without interruption.

Windshield Rattle

When the windshield glass becomes loose in its frame, it causes an annoying rattle. It is very difficult to close the frame so that it will grip the glass more securely without the possibility of breaking the latter. If the glass is not too loose the rattle can be eliminated by filling the space in the frame with shellac. This can be applied with a sharp pointed stick or a brush and should be applied slowly so that it will pack tightly in the opening.

WATER INJURY TO TIRES IS SMALL

Running Through Stream Is Not Injurious.

Now and then in the course of an automobile trip a car has to pass through a stream, and the question is sometimes discussed whether the action of the water is harmful to the tires. The same question arises when the car is out in a heavy rain.

Such a wetting is practically nothing at all, either for damage or improvement. At any rate, the effect on the tire is not harmful. Two chief constituents of a tire are rubber and cotton, both vegetable substances, and as a rule water does not injure vegetable matter. As illustrative of this point, there is the old but true story of the farmer who, when one of his rubber boots fell into a well, placed the other on a shelf in a closet. Twelve years later when the well was cleaned the lost boot was found to be in excellent condition, but the boot on the shelf had fallen into ruin.

If running through a brook resulted in cooling a tire the effect would be decidedly beneficial, but a quick dash through the water has little effect on the heated air within the tire and consequently the temperature change in the tire after its bath is negligible.

Water itself apparently does no harm to tires, but the combination of air and moisture commonly known as humidity is very destructive, especially on the cotton in ordinary fabric tires. The moist air works in between the layers of the fabric and rots them out, sometimes even before the tires leave the dealer's storeroom. Cord tires stand humidity better.

The harmful effect of moist air is the chief reason why, when tires are stored, they should be kept in a dry atmosphere. As sunlight is also harmful, the storage place should be darkened.

Shabby Tires Are Not Favored for Any Car

Shabby tires on a good-looking car! Yet stand on any street corner today and count the number of patched-up, dilapidated tires which are being used to the last mile. The cost of keeping these tires running for a few thousand miles would nearly pay for new ones. Mileage such as this comes high.

Tire conservation does not mean picking up a decrepit tire and putting it back into service at a big repair cost just to save a little rubber left in the tread. It means taking care of the tire from the first so that it will be able to deliver all the mileage built into it by the maker. When tires are so far worn that they are soon to blow, it is poor economy to repair them. Such a course means sacrifice of the inner tube as well.

Cheap, makeshift patches, boots and temporary repairs of all kinds are now being called into use as never before, but patching up an old casing in which separation of fabric plies has already begun, cannot give the freedom from tire trouble on which the pleasure in motoring so largely depends.

Tying in Spring Leaves Will Prevent Spreading

Since the leaves in a spring have a tendency to spread apart, it is often hard to replace the spring tie-bolt in autos or trucks.

The easy way is to grip the head of the tie-bolt in a vise, and put all but the last four leaves one on top of the other. The last four leaves are put on crosswise, or spread around like the ribs of an umbrella, which allows the nut to be easily started on the bolt.

With the nut on the bolt, swing the bottom cross leaf into place. Then each succeeding leaf will slide easily into position. Then tighten the tie-bolt nut. Of course, the clamps on each end will have to be removed until the spring is assembled.

Anything These Days

Running downhill recently a driver found to his utter surprise that a motor truck, supposedly at rest in the downhill position on the right side of the road, was actually going uphill backwards. The driver could not get it through his head for a moment and nearly lost control of his machine trying to dope it out, which showed that he was not prepared to expect most anything nowadays. The truck driver was utilizing the lower gear ratio of reverse in order to enable the engine to pull up an extra heavy load.

Robin Made Good Job of Plastering Nest

A family of bird lovers watched a robin building its nest, the News of Indianapolis reports. After it was practically completed the robin flew over to the bird bath and got himself thoroughly wet.

"Probably taking a bath after his arduous labors are over," said the family. Once out of the bird bath the robin flew to the flower garden, where the top soil was dusty and made himself thoroughly muddy. Then it plumped its mud-covered self down into the nest and turned round several times, evidently finishing the shaping of the nest and cementing the inner surface with the mud. The nest was as smooth as though it had been done by hand.

Now the bird lovers are wondering whether the robins figured out the process or after a bath went about the process of shaping the nest by getting inside and turning round and round.

U. S. Tobacco Consumption

The United States government made a third of a billion dollars out of the tobacco trade last year. Revenue from tobacco taxes, notably from cigarettes, has been steadily increasing for many years. The total for 1924 was $334,661,405, compared with $317,541,826 in 1923. Taxes on cigarettes made up most of this, amounting to $213,143,138 in 1924 and $193,489,876 in 1923. Popularity of cigars is declining slightly, it was indicated, the revenue declining from $47,659,353 in 1923 to $44,920,643 in 1924. Manufactured tobacco, including preparations for pipes and for chewing, increased slightly from $67,084,434 to $67,323,997. Snuff taxes decreased from $7,093,792 to $7,015,191.

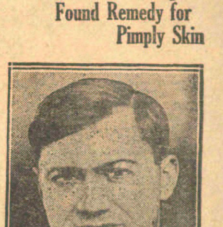
How Robert M. Koenig Found Remedy for Pimply Skin



For years my skin would break out every once in a while—and ointments did very little to help me.

I read a doctor's article stating that pimply skin usually comes from the stomach—and bowels not getting rid of the poisons.

I tried Carter's Little Liver Pills for a few days—and since that time my skin is smooth and clear. Now I tell my friends the right way of getting rid of a broken out skin—and also of steering clear of upset stomach and sick headache. Carter's are all you claim for them.

Prof. F. S. Goodrich lectured interestingly on 'Mexico" at the church Sunday. Among other things, the Professor said that President Obregon had done more for the Mexican laboring man than all former rulers combined. Probably Obregon's interest in the working man is one reason why the Associated Press dailies rarely hand out bouquets to the Mexican leader because the A. P. usually displays an unfriendly attitude towards labor at critical times. Dr. Goodrich also declared that American profiteers in Mexico were a greater hindrance to progress than were the Mexicans themselves, which is exactly what the Socialists have been saying for several years. John K. Turner in "Barbarous Mexico" has explained how American capitalists were to blame for much of the trouble in the southern republic. For instance, there was Hearst who agitated for 15 years in an attempt to stir up trouble between this country and Mexico and the reason for the agitation lay in the fact that Hearst owned several hundred thousands acres of land in Mexico which would have been more valuable had the U. S. intervened, Hearst owns 22 of the largest papers in this country, such dailies as the Chicago Examiner and the Chicago American being in the list. Upton Sinclair in "The Brass check" tells how General Otis of the Los Angeles Times owned 650,000 acres in Mexico and how Otis clamored for war along with Hearst so it appears that Professor Goodrich is correct in his ideas concerning the land of Revolution.

Memorial Day Proclamation

By the Governor

The march of the Grand Army of the Republic is nearly over. The vast and sturdy ranks of a generation ago have dwindled to a hazy line of aged but exalted veterans. Time was when men from their own ranks decorated the graves of their fallen comrades and glorified the deeds of living warriors. This duty has now fallen upon the citizens of a grateful republic. Once each year as long as this, the happiest, mightiest, and most righteous of all nations endures, we will be called upon to honor not only the valor of veterans of the Civil War, but to pay homage to soldiers of all other conflicts of the nation. In peace with all the world, our tribute to the honored dead and the surviving veterans who made our happiness possible, should this year be more impressive than ever before.

Therefore, I, Alexander J. Groesbeck, as Governor of Michigan, proclaim and urge a proper observance of Saturday, May 30, 1925, as Memorial Day.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State this thirteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord, one thousand, nine hundred and twenty-five.

Lee Barse Hit By Automobile Truck

The following item is copied from a Pontiac paper:

"Levi Barse, 89 years of age an employe at the county farm, died of injuries received at 4:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon when he was struck by a truck driven by William Dineen at White Lake road and west boulevard. He sustained a broken left arm, broken pelvic bone and badly injured back. Although he was hurried to the Pontiac city hospital after the accident, he lived only about one hour.

Dineen, accompanied by Chas. Cascadden, was hauling cement to the county farm. The truck was owned by the Benson Coal Co by whom Dineen was employed. He claims to have sounded his horn when he saw Mr. Barse walking on the pavement. Mr. Barse according to Dineen, turned round saw the truck, and stepped to the side of the road. As the machine arrived opposite where he was standing, Mr. Barse stepped on the pavement in front of the machine and was struck before it could be stopped by Dineen.

Howard F. J. Leonard of Pontiac saw the accident and took Mr. Barse in his automobile to the city hospital. Efforts of doctors to save his life were futile, and he died an hour later.

Mr. Barse had been employed at the county farm for nearly two years. Prior to that time he had been living with his son, George Barse, at 146 LaSalle St. One day Levi Barse expressed a desire to find a place where he could do some work to pass away the time He left his son's home and secured a position at the county home where he has been since that time. He was formerly a resident of North Adams, Mich."

Short services for Mr. Barse were held in the afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wilcox on Thursday Rev. Hunt officiating, and interment took place at 1:00 p. m.

Serious Auto Accident

On the state road east of North Adams about ¼ mile occurred an accident on Wednesday evening about 10 o'clock and the people concerned in it feel very fortunate indeed that nobody was hurt. Herbert G. Wells and family were going east in a Ford touring car when they came up behind Burl Shambaugh driving a buggy, also going east. Not noticing Mr. Shambaugh's rig until close to it, Paul Wells who was driving turned out to pass him when he collided with the Overland car of Paul Couts driving at a rapid rate from the east. The Wells car crowded the Shambaugh buggy against the guard rail on the south side of the highway breaking two hind wheels and twisting the axle. The force of the impact turned the Wells car completely around and it headed west. The left front wheel was smashed, the steering wheel demolished and windshield broken. Mr. and Mrs. Wells who were riding in the rear seat were thrown ahead with considerable force and bruised. Paul Wells fortunately was not hurt. The Overland was crowded into the gutter on the north side and the front end badly twisted. It will hardly be worth repairing. Mr. Couts was not hurt other than bumped. Neither car carried any insurance.

THIS WOMAN'S REMARKABLE RECOVERY

Entirely Due To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Forest City, Iowa. — "My first child lived only a short time and I was sick for a year after. When I bent over and raised myself up again I could almost scream with pain in my back. One day I was so bad that I had to leave my washing and get ready to go to the doctor. He gave me medicine but it did no more good than if I drank just water. Once when we had been in town a little book telling about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was left in our car. I have taken five bottles of the Vegetable Compound now and I do all my housework and help with the milking and taking care of chickens and garden. Besides I have a fine baby girl eight months old, just the picture of health and I am feeling fine myself. You may use this letter as a testimonial and I will answer any letters asking about the Vegetable Compound." —Mrs. OSCAR F. BORGELIN, Route No. 5, Forest City, Iowa.

Famous Religious Order

The Franciscans were a religious order founded by St. Francis d'Assissi about 1209. In England they were called Gray Friars, in allusion to the gray mantles worn by them. They appeared in Great Britain in 1220, and at the time of their suppression by Henry VIII in 1536, they had more than sixty abbeys. The Franciscans were vowed to chastity, poverty, and obedience, and lived an austere and ascetic life. Among their number may be mentioned Duns Scotus, Roger Bacon, St. Bonaventure, Cardinal Ximenes, Alexander of Hales, and Elliam of Okham. St. Francis was canonized by Pope Gregory IX in 1228.—Kansas City Star.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Business Wearies of Interference by the Various Federal Commissions.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

BUSINESS is growing very tired of what it considers unnecessary interference by governmental agencies, and in the annual convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in Washington, it gave voice to that feeling.

"Government inquisition of the private citizen and his business, from the publishing of his income tax to innumerable investigations by specially constituted commissions is becoming unpopular," declared the president of the organization, Richard F. Grant, of Cleveland.

In the opinion of Robert W. Bingham of Louisville, leader in the co-operative marketing movement, the legislation proposed by "cheap demagogue politicians" is dangerous to the country; and he said any further legislation for the relief of agriculturists would be superfluous.

A. C. Dodson of Bethlehem, Pa., a coal operator, said that in nine years of experience with federal and state supervision of coal production he could "recall no step which has been ultimately of value to the consumer, employee or operator." He expressed the fear that unless natural conditions bring about some cure for the present serious plight of the coal industry, artificial stimulants will be applied by legislative action, and then no one will escape and one and all we will be thrown to the lions."

That the administration sympathizes with the views of the business men to a considerable extent was indicated by the address of William E. Humphrey, a Republican member of the federal trade commission, when he explained the recent changes in its rules made with the approval of President Coolidge. He said these changes were designed to make the activities of the commission less obnoxious to business, and that the opposition to them came only from those who sought to use the commission for political purposes. He declared the body would no longer be used as a publicity bureau for socialistic propaganda.

In line with this attitude of the government was the decision last week of the special federal court of equity in the case of the International Harvester company. This court, sitting in St. Paul, Minn., decided that a 1918 decision divesting the company of three of its manufacturing lines has proved effective in removing any trace of monopoly. Therefore, the court denied the petition for supplemental provisions to the original decree. The petition contended the International Harvester company is still a combination in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act. But the special court held that the evidence not only failed to support the charge that since the reorganization decree the company has been "unduly or unreasonably monopolizing interstate commerce, but conclusively proves it has not done and is not doing so."

Senators Borah of Idaho and Norris of Nebraska gave out statements favoring the abolition of the federal trade commission on the ground that it has come under the influence of factional politics and outside political pressure and no longer serves the purpose for which it was created.

Senator Fess of Ohio, addressing the International Association of Garment Manufacturers in Chicago, said what the country needed was fewer new laws and a closer study of economics and economic laws. "We are now nearly a government by commissions," said Mr. Fess, "and this bureaucratic movement of the last 25 years is the product of the demand for increased legislation."

JONATHAN M. DAVIS, former governor of Kansas, is not guilty of conspiracy to solicit bribes in payment for pardons, according to the verdict of the jury that heard the case against him in Topeka. The judge's charge to the jury was considered favorable to the defendant and Davis was acquitted on the fourth ballot. Another criminal action against Davis and his son, Russell, is still pending. The charge against Carl J. Peterson, bank examiner under Davis and named jointly with him in the case just ended, will be dismissed.

FOR some time a senatorial committee with Couzens of Michigan as chairman has been investigating conditions in the internal revenue bureau with especial reference to enforcement of the prohibition laws, and it appears that several members of the committee are not at all pleased with the way this work has been carried on. Some of them went so far as to declare that prohibition enforcement was a farce and that when it was made comparatively effective in one region the conditions grew correspondingly worse in other regions.

Senator Watson of Indiana told the committee that the administration, from President Coolidge down, was determined to enforce prohibition to the limit. He continued: "For the first time since the dry law was enacted the people are going to find out what it means to have the law enforced to the limit and the country actually dry. Then, if they are not satisfied it will be up to them to have the law modified.

"Tremendous efforts are going to be made to make the law effective. The drive against rum runners along the Atlantic seaboard is just the beginning and before the administration is through every agency at the command of the government will be enlisted in the drive."

Administration leaders say that though the President wishes the dry law enforced to the limit, he insists all the bureaus concerned must keep within the appropriations voted by congress. Secretary Mellon says no huge expenditure of money will be needed to enable the coast guard to put the Atlantic coast rum-running ring out of business. Many of the vessels from "rum row" there have taken their liquor cargoes to Halifax.

There were two wet developments last week. Ontario province, dry for nine years, returned to the restricted sale of ale, beer and porter limited to 4.4 per cent of alcoholic content, and the city of Windsor, just across from Detroit, accommodated hordes of thirsty visitors from the United States. The Wisconsin assembly approved a state-wide referendum in 1926 on the issue of asking congress to modify the Volstead act to permit 2.75 per cent beer, with the old-time saloon barred. The same assembly adopted a resolution calling upon congress to convene a constitutional convention to rescind the prohibition amendment.

GOVERNORS, ex-governors, congressmen and other notables representing 19 states and Ontario, Canada, gathered in Michigan City for the meeting of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater association and discussed plans for furthering the project of deepening and canalizing the St. Lawrence river for ocean-going traffic. An interesting coincidence was the arrival, the same day, at the Michigan City docks of a steamer from Cornwall, England, with a cargo of clay for Kalamazoo, this vessel being the first of a fleet of three ships chartered by the Michigan City and Michigan state chambers of commerce.

PRESIDENT VON HINDENBURG'S government is standing up well against the attacks of the Socialists. In the first round a vote of no confidence in the Luther cabinet was defeated, 125 to 214. Now the labor unions have joined the Socialists in fighting the new tariff policy which proposes to tax grains and meats, increasing the cost of living. The new tariff schedules provide also for large increases all through the import list. Higher duties on automobiles and artificial silk are frankly attributed to American competition. The German monarchists are growing bold with success, and Herr Schiele, who represents them on the cabinet, already has announced two proposals for changing the Weimar constitution. One would substitute the old flag for the republican emblem, and the other would define and extend paragraph 48 of the constitution, giving the president dictatorial powers in certain emergencies. Schiele and the other Nationalists want a permanent committee on constitutional revision, and the Socialists object. The former also seek to repeal the law "for the protection of the republic" under which offenders against the Weimar constitution are arrested and tried.

Foreign Minister Stresemann told the reichstag—and the world—that President von Hindenburg intends faithfully to carry out the Dawes plan; that Germany will not join the League of Nations until the more serious difficulties with the allies are settled or until the Cologne bridgehead has been evacuated; that Germany believes France has designs on the Rhineland and that the security pact proposed by Berlin was primarily to secure the western German frontiers; that Germany cannot and will not recognize as eternally binding the eastern frontier as outlined by the treaty of Versailles; and that Germany considers that the disarmament problem cannot be a one-sided affair and believes the only solution of the question is universal disarmament. Germany is in much greater danger of an attack in its helpless state than are its neighbors, who are armed to the teeth.

IT IS finally admitted by Washington that informal suggestions have been made to our debtor nations that they take some definite steps toward the funding of the debts. Their attention is called to the fact that this question already is in American politics to an undesirable degree and that the situation will be worse if something is not done before congress meets in December.

PRIMO DE RIVERA, head of the Spanish military directorate, and his colleagues must feel satisfied that the danger of labor revolts has passed and that normal conditions have been restored, for King Alfonso has signed a decree abolishing military law throughout the country. It is presumed that the end of the dictatorship is not far distant. It has served its purpose in crushing out industrial disorders mercilessly and in driving from the country about all the more liberal leaders who were able to escape imprisonment.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the French foreign office that Fez has been saved from the Riffians by gallant bayonet attacks by the French troops, aided by the good work of the air service and the artillery. The battle was fought northwest of the big Moroccan city at which Abd-el-Krim has been aiming his movement, and it is believed General Colombat's victory will force the Riffians to retire from French Morocco entirely. Such an outcome will give great satisfaction in Paris, where the severe campaign was causing considerable anxiety.

CHANG TSO-LIN, who must always be identified as "the Manchurian war lord," has occupied Peking with his troops and Feng Yu-Hsiang, "the Christian general," has withdrawn to the northwestern frontier. Chang's soldiers are policing the Chinese Eastern railway across Manchuria and are said to have mulcted the railway of $6,000,000 by the sale of military passes. The soviet Russian ambassador at Peking has protested vigorously against this, and observers believe Moscow is preparing to back Feng if he breaks definitely with Chang. So another civil war in China is in prospect, with Russia possibly taking an active part.

LIEUT. GEN. NELSON A. MILES, who fell dead while attending a circus in Washington, was laid to rest in Arlington after simple services which were attended by President Coolidge, General Pershing and many other notable persons. Three thousand troops, of all services, made up the escort of the gun carriage that bore the casket to the cemetery, and French 75's fired a salute of 15 guns. At the tomb the regular troops fired three volleys, a bugler played taps, and the remains of one of America's most distinguished military commanders were consigned to the grave. Among the mourners were men who fought under General Miles in the Civil war, the Indian wars and the Spanish-American war, and delegations from the many societies to which he belonged.

Condemn Attack Made on Wife of Jackson

Nashville, Tenn.—An offer to stand corrected from Meade Minnigerode, New York writer, on any historical inaccuracies in his informal biography of Rachel Jackson, wife of the seventh President of the United States, was not considered at a meeting of a committee appointed by a mass meeting of citizens here condemning him for the story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

The committee headed by Mrs. Walter Stokes, regent of the Ladies' Hermitage association, and Mrs. Betty M. Donelson, president of the Andrew Jackson society, both of Nashville, revised resolutions adopted at the meeting.

The Minnigerode biography referred to "Old Hickory's" wife as "dowdy" and implied that she was an illiterate person, while General Jackson was held up in the light of "a swash-buckling roisterer, wine-bibbing gamester, a street bully."

This is an "indefensible slander which all Tennessee resents and which the American sense of justice strongly condemns," the resolutions declared.

"The interesting thing about Rachel Jackson," the resolutions continued, "is not perchance that she could not spell perfectly or meet the requirements of classical English, but that she could capture the heart and fire the imagination of a man like Jackson, and hold his chivalrous devotion until the last day of her life."

Strange Death Pact

A strange death pact of lovers was revealed at a coroner's inquiry at Johannesburg. A nurse was found stabbed with a pair of scissors. Before she died, the coroner said, she stabbed her lover with a hatpin, which penetrated his heart.

PREPARING FOR SUMMER MILK

It is now the time when the dairy cow, the foster mother of mankind, is to be given a chance under natural conditions. New information which has recently been discovered at some of the state agricultural colleges indicates that green feed and sunlight combined make it possible for a cow to build up her system by storing minerals and other body reserves, provided she receives a sufficient supply of good feed.

A heavy milking cow, however, will need feed in addition to pasture if the milk flow is to be maintained. Milking heavily with pasture as the sole source of feed causes the cow to lose weight. This loss of weight should be watched and extra feed given to prevent the cow from becoming thin, which will result in reduced milk production later.

With the coming of the summer season, new and interesting problems present themselves which concern the care of milk. The first warm nights are apt to cause milk to sour unless summer care is practiced. It is important to take precautions which will keep down the number of bacteria and prevent their growth. To do this milk must be produced under clean conditions, be kept in thoroughly cleaned utensils, and be cooled as soon as possible after it comes from the cow.

Summer is one of the easiest seasons in which to produce clean milk. There will be times, however, when a considerable amount of mud and dirt will collect on the udder and flanks of cows, and if a portion of this material drops into the milk it will injure its keeping quality. The dirt which collects on the flanks and udder should be removed before milking time by wiping with a damp cloth. If the hair on the udder and underline is clipped short the cleaning can be done effectively and quickly. Incidentally, the practice of clipping the cow all over before turning to pasture not only makes it easier to keep her clean, but it relieves the itchy condition that develops during the stabling months.

Much of the milk produced in the country is hauled long distances in large trucks. In summer if the cans of milk are not protected from the sun before leaving the farm, and again enroute, it will be difficult to keep the milk sweet until it is used. Every time a day's milk is returned to the farm, for whatever reason, there is a distinct financial loss. Only by producing a sanitary milk and then taking care of it can satisfactory results be obtained to all concerned.

An Old Amphibian

From the Hudson Post we clip the following item:

"A big turtle nearly two feet in length and weighing some 25 lbs was picked up near Horseshoe Pond Monday morning by Russel Gillette whose farm is near there. The big turtle was brought to Hudson in his Ford car and attracted quite a lot of .attention from bystanders. Dr. J. M. Timms, after a close examination stated that the turtle was around one thousand years old. When Columbus discovered America says "Doc" he was just in middle age. He was going strong when William the Conqueror crossed the English Channel. Just think, this turtle has waited 1000 years to take a ride with Russell Gillette in a Ford car."

It is claimed that this fellow's joints were so stiff that he squeaked as he ambled along and "Doc" Timms is thinking of using an Alemite syringe to inject a little hard oil into his hinges. No doubt the turtle would enjoy the process and probably "Doc" would thereby gain much necessary information as to the modus operandi of oiling his bus. Well, we're glad Hudson can at times enjoy a few relics of the time of "William the Conqueror." We often wonder where this turtle was hanging out when they built the old Comstock House and why he hasn't ate all the beans out of Bean Creek.

Government Has Troubles

The Government is constantly working to untangle the problem of misdirected pieces of mail and expects the newspapers to assist in the work by publicity. It will supply them with available information to localize the stories.

If, after an exhaustive effort the postal "detective" must give up the puzzle, and there is no return address, the piece of mail is consigned to the Dead Letter Office, where it again changes its name to dead letter or dead parcel, as the case may be.

Its period of existence as a Nixie is the most expensive one. It demands special attention from the very best clerks. Valuable time is spent in its behalf, time which also may prove more costly to the mailer or intended recipient through the attendant delay.

But in the long run, the postal loses most. In Chicago 400 workers do nothing but handle nixies. In New York the service costs $500 daily. In all the nixie costs the government about $1,740,000 a year.

Developing Oat Varieties Immune From Smut Diseases

An effort to supply farmers of the oat-producing areas with varities of oats immune from or highly resistant to the smut diseases, which are very widespread and cause annual heavy losses to the crop, has been given encouraging impetus by the discovery recently of a variety immune from covered smut. The immune variety, known as Markton, is a selection from an unnamed variety of oats with yellowish kernels, obtained from Turkey about 20 years ago. It has been tested at the Oregon and Washington stations, where it has not only proved to be immune from covered smut but has also shown the highest yielding ability of any variety tested at these stations. The discovery of immunity from covered smut in a variety with desirable kernel characteristics in combination with high yielding power is a decided step toward a solution of the smut problem in oats.

In 1923 the smut diseases caused an annual reduction in the total oat crop of the United States estimated at 35,278,000 bushels, or 2.55 per cent. This percentage of reduction varies in different sections, amounting to as much as 10 per cent in Kentucky, 8 percent in Massachusetts and Arkansas, between 5 and 6 percent in Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Illinois, and Minnesota. Iowa, the greatest oat producing State in point of total bushels produced, suffered a loss of 1 percent, which means a loss of more than 2,000,000 bushels Oregon, where the immune variety Markton has been grown commercially, showed no less in 1923:

Hybrids of the Markton variety have been developed by the United States Department of Agriculture by crossing with it a number of the best standard varieties. These have been sent this spring to four agricultural experiment stations in the oat producing areas, where they will be tested for their resistance to the disease. Marked and satisfactory progress has been made by plant breeders in developing varieties of cereals which are resistant to various diseases, and it is hoped that the annual loss to the oat crop from the smut diseases will be greatly reduced by subsequent development of resistant varieties.

Watch Your Step

For God's Sake Mr. if you happen to be a tourist traveling the highways and by-ways of Michigan or if you are a camper in the great piny woods of the north, be careful with that fire! Do you know what it costs this great state to fight forest fires every year? Do you know what it means when the fire demon lets loose in a thousand acre tract of pine timber where pitch and rosin are the principal ingredients? Do you know that yearly there are millions of feet of the finest lumber both pine and hardwood lost through the scorching influence of the fire demon? Michigan (grand old commonwealth) is today way down the ladder of states in timber production? Simply because the carelessness of the woodsman in skinning out the finest and the criminal negligence of the camper and huntsman have reduced our forests to poor scrub patches. Time was, not so long ago—when Michigan had the largest and the finest straightest cork pines in this country, The cadaverous maw of the saw mill opened and swallowed some of it, but in all probability more by far was destroyed by periodical conflagerations started by just such lawless campers or hunters.

Michigan Farm Co-Ops Make Big Stride

Fully 40 percent of the farmers in Michigan do business through cooperative organizations, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation which reports more than 270 percent increase in membership of farmers' business organizations in the state since 1915.

Ten years ago the membership of the 127 farmer cooperative organizations then in existence in the state was 21,100. Today, the Foundation states, the figure has reached the 79,000 mark, while the number of organizations has jumped to 423.

Dairy cooperatives head the list of farmers' cooperative efforts in the state with 89 distinct organizations, according to the Foundation. Grain and livestock come next with 83 and 82 respectively, and there are some fifty five fruit and vegetable groups. In addition there were more than 100 miscellaneous groups embracing poultry products and other lines.

More than nine tenths of the farmers' organizations in the state are incorporated, but only one third report paying stock dividends the Foundation finds. Seventy one per cent of the organizations limit membership to members producers

Cooperatives have become an important factor in American agriculture, according to the Foundation. Two and one half million farmers out of 6,500,000. in the United States now belong to more than 10,000 cooperatives bodies which do an annual business in excess of $2,500,000,000. This is an increase of nearly 200 percent in the number of organizations since 1915 and an increase in membership in the same period of nearly 300 percent.

Re-Burial of Pottawattomies

Southern Michigan the home of the ancient Pottawattomie Indians has produced some very interesting relics of their day but by far the best collection that has come to light of late is the nine skeletons which were unearthed on the Pike near Clinton last fall by the road gang with a steam shovel. A number of trinkets dear to the heart of the Indian were also found there and the state of Michigan has been harassed considerably of late as to the proper preservation of the remains. There was considerable dispute at the time as to who really owned the skeletons, but it was finally settled by the state taking custody of them. Later a sort of sentimental idea got possession of the officers and instead of placing them in a museum it was decided to again re-inter which was carried out at Cambridge Junction last Sunday, with suitable ceremony. The coffin was of unique design, little children threw flowers, game etc., into the grave and a stone cairn was raised over the grave. L Whitney Watkins made a speech.

It is estimated these First Americans were laid in the bosom of mother earth about one hundred years ago, but not so long ago that they did not know about the white man's fire water, since a whiskey flask was found with the bones. As we understand it there are several Indian burial grounds located along this Pike, one being in the extreme north east corner of this county in the Township of Somerset opposite Bunday Hill on the farm of Jabin Strong. Whether any attempt has ever been made to locate relics here we do not know. But there certainly is a rich field for the curator in this section. It is possible the State will sooner or later pass laws making these fields municipal property, and forbid any private tinkering with it. Sentiment sometimes cuts a large figure with even the Government.

Michigan Auto Drivers Harassed

The leading officials at Lansing are now talking of more rigid laws for the motorist who applies for a license to drive. He must pass an examination as to his fitness to handle a machine on the public streets, and from all appearances the new regulation would make it necessary to prove a number of things which heretofore have been unthought of. A good many defective drivers are at present owning and driving automobiles, and if it is the desire of officials to put them all off the map there is a "hot time" on the way. Scores of persons now licensed to drive are troubled with defective nerves and who at the crucial moment do precisely the wrong thing to avoid an accident.

Hundreds of drivers are partially blind, a lot more are incapacitated for some other reasons not mentioned. All these people will have to change to conform to certain tests, and if they can't do it, will be eventually eliminated. This is the most exacting law that has ever been put before Lansing solons, It is the general opinion that big cities like Detroit and Grand Rapids are in need of such drastic measures, and to put restrictions on the cities and leave the country alone, would seem unfair, so it is likely that if this law is passed, it will be universal.

Inebriety is without doubt the worst evil of them all, and to get by, and do justice to all, is going to be a hard problem. Every day we read of large numbers of drivers throughout the state who have had their licenses revoked. We sometimes wonder what becomes of all these people, Do they give up the ownership for all time or do they get by through some other loophole? If the entire crew of black sheep were lined up they would constitute quite an army.

Over at River Rouge and other suburban points, the officials have tried the expedient of taking "speeders" over to the hospitals and showing them the suffering victims, hoping to instill into their thick beans the germ of compassion, but it has gone aft a'gley. It is deplorable but true, a vast majority have no conscience— they are practically fiends as far as the tender bodies of children, cats, dogs or old and infirm people are concerned.

Arthur Ellenwood, convicted by a jury in circuit court of assault on a nine-year-old girl, was sentenced by Judge Chester Monday to the crook laundry at Ionia for eighteen months.

Do You Know?

That 21,000.000 letters went to the Dead Letter office last year?

That 803,000 parcels did likewise?

That 100,000 letters go into the mail yearly in blank envelopes.

That $12,000 in postage stamps is found in similar fashion.

That $3,000,000 in checks, drafts and money orders never reaches intended owners?

That Uncle Sam collects $92000 a year in postage for the return of mail sent to the dead letter office?

That it costs Uncle Sam $1,740-000 yearly to look up addresses on misdirected mail?

That 200,000,000 letters have to be looked after to establish addresses?

That it costs $500 a day to look after misdirected mail in Chicago alone?

NEW YORK NOW CENTER OF WORLD WIDE RADIO SERVICE

Ten Channels of International Service Established in Five Years.

Transatlantic cable telegraphy is now some sixty-six years old; transatlantic radio communication, commercially speaking, is less than five years old. There are now seventeen cables on the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean, connecting Great Britain and France with the United States, and there are seven radio transmitters on the Atlantic coast, with one central receiving station, connecting the United States not only with Great Britain and France, but also radio direct to Germany, Norway, Sweden, Italy, Poland, Argentina, Havana and Japan. These seven transmitters and one receiver, all joined together and controlled from a single office at 64 Broad street, New York City, are now handling between 25 and 30 per cent of the total number of messages exchanged daily between the United States and Europe. The remaining 70 to 75 per cent of the traffic flowing between the old world and the new is carried by the seventeen cables on the Atlantic's bed.

On the Pacific coast there is but one cable connecting the Orient with the United States. The single radio circuit that serves this same span across the Pacific is now handling nearly 50 per cent of the total traffic between these two continents.

As a result of the foregoing, the center of the world's communication has been transplanted from Great Britain to the United States. A glance at a cable map shows that the great majority of the world's cables terminate in London, whereas the greater majority of the world's radio circuits terminate in New York.

It is the feature of direct communication, free from censorship, and from interruption, that gives to radio its greatest opportunity for future development along commercial, political and social lines.

The Monroe Doctrine in radio is being strictly observed. A station now erected in Buenos Aires gives direct radio service between the United States and Argentina. Turning to the Orient, a great radio program has been undertaken for China.

The new transoceanic service, by means of which letters may be transferred by radio at a cost little greater than that of postage, is now in practice. The mission of radio is to make communication more prompt, more reliable, and more economical. The symbol "Radio Letter" has back of it the thought that the greatest relays in the forwarding of a letter abroad are the mail boat across the ocean and the mail train from the far shore to the place of delivery, the letter oftentimes embracing several countries. Radio eliminates these delays.

An important aspect of radio communication, from a technical standpoint, is its great possibilities for high-speed transmission. Already it has been found practicable to send and receive some 100 words per minute, and operate duplex, which means sending and receiving at the same time; in other words, a speed of 200 words per minute for each of these circuits.

ADVERSITY A STIMULANT TO GOOD FARMING

An interesting experience is told by Dean Dodson of a Louisiana farmer who was just about breaking even in growing cotton. One day his wife fell seriously ill and was obliged to go to the hospital. A little later his daughter was also taken to the hospital. Before he was through with this experience he was confronted with a bill for $2,200. What was he to do?

Like a good business man he began to figure how he might increase his income and cut down his expenses. He had a few cows that he kept for raising calves. He started to milk these and sell the product. He had some cull potatoes that were unsalable. He fed these to his cows and some pigs which he was able to buy right. Other waste products were utilized in the same manner. In the garden he had more turnips than he needed for his own use. These he sorted, selling the best and feeding the poor ones. He consulted with his merchants as to what garden crops he might profitably grow for the local market.

He figured that he had some idle land that he might use in growing grain and hay. He enlarged his flock of poultry and took better care of it. He was more careful in the use of his auto and saved a considerable sum that ordinarily went for gasoline. By taking advantage of the increased sources of income and by cutting out unnecessary expenses he was able by the end of the year to pay off his hospital bill, and in the meantime had discovered the secret of sound and successful farming.—Banker-Farmer.

A New Decalogue of Patriotism

The flags will be waving and the bands playing and the people singing together on Memorial Day. The Voice from Sinai is not stilled The old decalogue takes new forms to meet the complex needs of our day.

Thou shalt make no graven images of the Lord thy God, nor have other gods before him. Thou shalt not make a god of thy flag, nor fall down and worship it. Thou shalt not worship words written by the hand of man, nor shalt thou make a god of any Constiution, and give it the reverence due only to Him. The Lord thy God is a jealous God, and yields His sovereignty to no work of man. Thou shalt not take His name in vain and boast, "Lo, the Lord is on our side, and with His help we will prevail." After this fashion do the heathen boast and claim the God of all the earth for themselves alone. They beguile themselves with phrases, and they shout together, "Deutchland uber alles," Brittania rules the waves, America right or wrong.

Thou shalt not vaunt thyself, nor be puffed up. Thou shalt not prate of this superior people, prepared by God for the mastery of the world, destined through all eternity for the ruling of mankind Thou shalt not boast of the greatness of thy lands, the number of thy oxen and asses, of thy wive and sons and daughters, of th maid servants, and thy man servants, of thy railroads and bank clearings, and the cunning inventions of thy hands. Thou shalt not parade thy battleships, making hard the heart of thy neighbors across the seas. Thou shalt not march thy mighty men, and flaunt them in the face of the world, and cry out, "Behold our strength." Thou shalt not withdraw in the insolence of contempt and draw the seas about thee in thy security, and trumpet forth, "What concern are these nations to us?" After this fashion have the empires of the earth boasted, and their names pass from the earth.

Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbors. Thou shalt not say, "All Japanese are servants of Belial, and all Germans are priests of Moloch"; nor shalt thou make crooked thy finger against the people of Mexico. Thou shalt not believe the idle-minded when they speak contempt for those who live under other flags, for thou dost remember that in time of war and in times of peace, there be many who in the name of patriotism bring false witness against other peoples. Thou shalt remember that in the days when war covered the earth, and the light of the sun was dimmed with the smoke of many battles, that thou thyself and thy wife, and thy man servant and thy maid servant, swallowed great tales about Germany, and that under the strains of war thou didst repeat lies without end, and didst teach thy little children to hate.

Thou shalt not believe that all about America is good and that all about other peoples is bad. Thou shalt not teach thy son and thy daughter that America has a record unspotted by guilt, and unstained by selfish aggression. Thou shalt not sign petitions against the teacher who tells thy son and thy daughter that America has been guilty of grievious wrongs against Mexico and the Indian. But thou shalt teach their children to love truth and pursue it, that through love they may learn the patriotism which shall never be content until America rises to the heights of which our fathers dreamt.

Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's oil wells; thou shalt not covet his fertile acres, his iron mines his harbors and his rivers, nor any thing that is thy neighbor's. Thou shalt not give ear to the pleader for American rights, when American rights mean the denial of the human rights of Mexico or Cuban or Filipino.

Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt seek a better way for the settlement of world disputes, and shalt not accept the creed of those who would argue that war must ever be. Thou shalt not bless war, nor invoke the blessing of the Lord thy God upon it. Thou shalt neither slumber nor sleep until war be banished from the face of the earth.

Thou shalt not keep silence. Thy fathers gave the full measure of devotion that America might be free. Thou shalt not be faithless to their trust. Thou shalt cry out against oppression and raise thy voice in strength when congress permits wanton injustice toward weaker peoples, and when the war makers stir up strife to the East or to the West. Thou shalt not keep silence, nor contain thyself but thou shalt let thy voice be heard in the streets. Thou shalt give honor where honor is due; but thou shalt not be silent when the honor of America is attacked in the name of patriotism.

Thou shalt not hold in contempt the purity of thy neighbor's national hope of self respect. Thou shalt rejoice in the struggle for liberty in Mexico, the passion for the republic in Germany, the surging up of democracy in Japan.

Honor thy fathers and thy mothers, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. Thou shalt not cry, "All this is ours, the work of our hands." Thou shalt not forget the days of thy fathers, nor prove faithless to their trust. Thou shalt accord them the honor which carries on the work by them begun.

Thou shalt build a new and a better patriotism. In it thou wilt find more room, not less, for the love of America. More, not less, room for the appreciation of America's contribution to world greatness. More, not less, room for the appreciation of the men

"Whose stern, impassioned stress
A thoroughfare for freedom beat
Across the wilderness."

Thou shalt make room for new appreciation of other patriots of other lands. Thou shalt give skill its meed of praises, whether the skillful be yellow or white or black Thou shalt confer the accolade upon knightliness under every flag. Thou shalt see beyond the old horizons, and pierce old barriers. Thou shalt find heart and voice to sing—

"America, America!
God shed his grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood,
From sea to shining sea!"

National Dairy Meet To Be Held in State

Prominent dairy men from all parts of the country will gather at Grand Rapids on June 2 and 3 for the fortieth annual convention of the Holstein Friesian Association of America, the largest cattle breed association in the world.

The last time the "black and white" cattle gathering was held in Michigan was in 1916. Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois, is president of the national association, a position held for seven years by D. D. Aitken, of Flint, prominent state dairy man.

There will be 163 delegates from 44 states and Canadian provinces at the convention, according to J. G. Hayes, dairy extension man at the M. S. C. and also secretary of the state Holstein Friesian association. Michigan, the fifth largest Holstein state, will have ten official delegates at the convention table. Prominent among the speakers on the programs for the meeting are Prof. O. E. Reed, head of the dairy department at the M. S. C.; and Dr. John Harvey Kellog, of Battle Creek.

Blasting Charges Vary With Stumps

That no set rule for the amount of explosive to use in blasting out stumps can be given, the charge varying with the soil and moisture conditions and with the stump itself, is the opinion of L. F. Livingston, extension specialist in agricultural engineering at the M. S. C.

"The amount of moisture in the soil", says Livingston may vary the charge two or three cartridges either way. A light soil will require more pyrotol to blast a stump than a heavy soil. The age of the stump the kind of stump and its condition tend to vary the amount of explosive.

After making a thorough investigation of soil and moisture conditions and the stumps to be blasted a few blasts will soon determine the right amount of explosive to use. If pyrotol, the war salvage explosive is being used, it can be loaded stick for stick with twenty per cent dynamite.

Announce New U. P. Forestry Station

Plans for the development of a forestry experiment station and demonstration tract in Chippewa Co. have just been announced at the M. S. C. The Dunbar School, sixteen miles south of Sault Ste. Marie, was recently deeded to the college, and it has been turned over to the forestry deparrment for development.

An extensive forest nursery is being established on the lands of the Dunbar School, according to Prof. A. K. Chittenden, head of the forestry division. The plan is to produce forest stock for future planting.

The lands of the new station include about 500 acres of second growth timber, making an ideal place for experimental work in thinning and different methods of forest management.

The Chippewa County station will also be used for the summer forestry school camp of the college It is said to be well equipped with buildings, and it will provide excellent opportunities for study of actual forest conditions.

Ministers and social workers of Michigan, especially those interested in problems of rural community, will gather at the M. S. C. from July 20 to 31 for a special conference, according to announcement made here this week by E. H. Ryder, director of the M. S. C. summer school, under whose auspices the conference is to be held. More than a score of prominent speakers and leaders in rural community work, many of them drawn from outside the state, and already listed on the conference program.

Chicago Round-up Causes Tongue Battle

It's on again—the battle of tongues. At the grocer's, in meeting at church supper, in hotel lobby, everywhere there is evidence of it. Preachers base their Sunday morning sermons on it. Teachers discuss it among themselves and in their classes. Lodges pass resolutions concerning it. And like the cross word puzzle it will not down—this Rodeo. This Rodeo is nothing more or less than a "regular western round-up" which is to be staged in Chicago probably in August, but this is not yet settled. Humane societies in Chicago and other places took it up, and there is a considerable kick over the alleged cruelty of roping steers and mustangs. Only experts take part in this "roping" process and in it the Chicago Association of Commerce will provide a real clean thrill for thousands from every part of the United States. It would be serving no good purpose to stop the spectacle. But there are other ideas, and the battle of tongues keeps right on.

Howard B. Lige, formerly of the village of Somerset Centre, who joined the U. S. Marines before the World War, and at last reports was stationed in Santo Domingo, is claimed to be one of the most expert riflemen, his hits on bullseyes being at 200 to 600 yards. And his record was published in the Marine Corps target bulletin. Howard's parents live in Somerset now.

A truck belonging to O. D. Dellinger, driven by Glenn Fogel, was slightly mussed early last week Tuesday by colliding with a Detroit street car. The driver was hurt, considerable sugar sprinkled on the street, but we presume the insurance covered the loss.

Had Passed Away

Returning from his visit to the seashore little Dean told the family about the ocean. "Why," he exclaimed, his eyes big with excitement, "it jumped and leaped all around. I brought some of it home to show you. Now just look," and he produced a big bottle of sea water, the contents of which he poured into a pan, where it lay inert and lifeless. "Huh! that's funny," he said. "It must have died coming home."

How to build up your Weight

TO BE under weight often proves low fighting-power in the body. It often means you are minus nerve-power, minus red-cells in your blood, minus health, minus vitality. It is serious to be minus, but the moment you increase the number of your red-blood-cells, you begin to become plus. That's why S. S. S., since 1826, has meant to thousands of underweight men and women, a plus in their strength. Your body fills to the point of power, your flesh becomes firmer, the age lines that come from thinness disappear. You look younger, firmer, happier, and you feel it, too, all over your body. More red-blood-cells! S. S. S. will build them.

> "I'M ENGAGED
> SYNOPSIS. — In London the teller of the story of the adventures of "King Tommy," and known hereafter as "Uncle Bill," is informed by Lord Norheys, son of an old friend, that Lord Troyte, head of the British foreign office, Norheys' uncle, has a scheme to make him (Norheys) king of Lystria, in central Europe, through marriage to Calypso, daughter of King Wiadislaws, deposed monarch of that country. A financier, Procopius Cable, knows there is oil in profusion in Lystria, and with an English king on the throne the output could be secured for England. Norheys, in love with a stage dancer, Viola Temple, is not enthusiastic over the proposition. The patriarch, Menelaus, highest ecclesiastical dignitary in Lystria, is heartily in favor of the restoration of the monarchy, and Cable has generously financed the sentiment. Calypso is making a living dancing in the "Mascotte," Berlin cabaret. Norheys refuses to entertain the idea of giving up Viola Temple, to whom he is secretly engaged.

Having got all that settled, Cable approached Lord Edmund Troyte with a proposal that the marquis of Norheys, my godson, should be king of Lystria. He would have to marry the princess, of course. The Lystrians, being strong legitimists, insisted on that. But the princess, so Cable said, was a beautiful girl, with charming manners and far more respectable than her father had ever been.

"As a matter of fact," said Troyte, "she's a dancer in Berlin. Wiadislaws did not succeed in carrying off a penny from Lystria, so both he and the girl have to work for their living. But that is not an insuperable objection to her."

"Have you," I said, "laid that part of the schene before Norheys, asked him whether he was willing to marry the princess?"

"Not yet."

"I would," I said. "If I were you I'd mention that to Norheys before going any further. Indeed, it might be as well to find out what the princess thinks about it, too."

"She'll be all right," said Troyte. "Her name is Calypso."

Calypso is a pretty name, but I did not see that it gave us any guarantee that the girl would marry Norheys.

"Girls are dreadfully independent nowadays," I said "You can't be sure."

"She's dancing in a cabaret in Berlin. So Cable says."

"She ought to prefer being married, to that," I said. "Still if I were you I'd consult her. I should certainly consult Norheys."

Troyte took my advice about consulting Norheys; but he did not give me the satisfaction of telling me he meant to. He went on to discuss another side of the affair.

"The main thing," he said, "is that England should obtain control of the Lystrian oil. The civilization of the Twentieth century rests on oil precisely as that of the Nineteenth century rested on coal."

"Is that fellow Cable an Englishman?"

"He's a British subject," said Troyte, "naturalized before the war."

After that I had to listen to an account of the uses of oil in peace and war which bored me; to a description of the distribution of the present oil supply of the world and the small quantity of it controlled by England.

There, I think, lay the real motive of Troyte's action, the explanation of his consent to the plan of setting Norheys on the throne of Lystria. No doubt it pleased him—Troyte has a great deal of family pride—to think of his nephew being a king. And the Troytes had some slight connection with the Lystrian royal family. No doubt he thought that marriage to the Princess Calypso would save Norheys from an undesirable entanglement with Viola Temple. Troyte hated the idea of having to welcome that young lady as the next marchioness of Norheys. No doubt also Cable's remarkable personality had some influence with him. Procopius Cable is accustomed to getting his own way with all sorts of people, and has persuaded several clever men to do foolish things. Troyte likes and admires men of the Cable kind. He has a theory that the British empire has been built up by buccaneers; in the Elizabethan days by buccaneers who went forth in ships and looted, flying the British flag for their own protection, leaving it still fluttering in the places which they sacked after they sailed away. In the Eighteenth century the empire-building buccaneers called themselves merchants, or merchant adventurers, but they acted exactly as their predecessors did, looting, and then leaving the care of the conquered provinces to embarrassed statesmen at home. At the end of the Nineteenth century the buccaneers became financiers. But their methods and the results of them were the same as before. Procopius Cable was the latest and ablest of these filibustering empire-builders. That was Troyte's theory about him. And it influenced him in favor of any scheme suggested by Cable.

But the main thing was England's need of oil, and the possibility of obtaining an enormous supply of it in Lystria. For the sake of England's greatness he was ready to sacrifice Norheys, if sacrifice had been necessary.

There was also another consideration which weighed with Troyte. He came to it when he had finished with the oil.

"The Germans," he said, "are scheming to put up a king of their own in Lystria. The man they have in mind is the Prinz von Steinveldt."

"I used to know him," I said. "He was in the foreign office in Berlin. He must be a bit too old for the princess. Do you think she'd marry him?"

"The princess," said Troyte, "will marry the man she's told to."

I was not so sure about that. The spirit of revolt against that doctrine of a girl's duty laid firm hold upon the middle classes years ago. Since then it has been spreading upward, and, I dare say, downward. It would not surprise me to hear that rebellion is now openly advocated in the schoolrooms of palaces. Besides, Calypso appeared to be an emancipated woman. If she dances in a cabaret in Berlin she must have shed most of the garments of conventionality in which most princesses are wrapped.

"By the way," I said, "where's King Wiadislaws now? As the girl's father he may want to have a say about her marriage."

"Wiadislaws has gone under utterly," said Troyte. "I don't know where he is or what he's doing. We need not consider him."

CHAPTER III

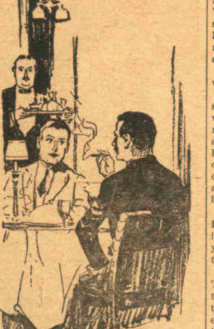
Two or three days later Norheys came to me in the club where I was lunching.

"Look here, Uncle Bill," he said, "you remember my telling you the other day about my going in for being a king and that sort of thing."

"Yes."

"Well, Uncle Ned's been at me again and he's rather surprised me. Now, I'm a fellow who isn't at all easy to surprise; for what I always say is: Whatever happens—even if the jolly old sun doesn't turn up in the morning at the proper hour—take it calmly. And that's what I do, make a regular rule of it; but I'm bound to say Uncle Ned made me jump this time."

"If there's anything more surprising than being asked suddenly to be a king," I said, "it must be something which would make an ancient Roman stoic jump."



"My Dear Norheys," I Said, "She's a Princess, the Daughter of a Man Who Was a European Sovereign Until a Few Years Ago."

"You'd never think," said Norheys, "that Uncle Ned would turn out to be a giddy matchmaker."

I knew what he was at then. Troyte must have taken my advice and mentioned the proposed marriage.

"He wants me to marry a black princess," said Norheys. "Now I'm not a prejudiced sort of fellow at all. Any girl may be a lady, don't you know? and a fellow ought to marry her, supposing he wants to, like the king that the poem's about who went round pretending to be a landscape painter and then married a beggar. I always say he was quite right—there, if he really fancied the girl. But—well, hang it all, Uncle Bill, however unprejudiced a fellow is, he must draw the line somewhere, and I do think it's a bit thick asking me to marry a black princess."

"But," I said, "the Princess Calypso isn't black. What makes you think she is?"

"Sure to be. All those desert islandy places are governed by black princesses. I dare say she's good looking enough in her way. Uncle Ned seemed to think so. But I don't like them black. And—well, hang it all, no fellow can possibly be expected to be pleased when he finds his wife is tattooed all over; and they all are. Quite right of her, of course, if it's the thing to do in her own country. I'm not blaming her in the least. Only just I don't like it."

"My dear boy," I said, "I'm not advising you to be a king, or to marry the lady. But I think I ought to tell you that Lystria isn't an island. It's miles, perhaps hundreds of miles, from the sea, and I don't think that the Princess Calypso can possibly be black. I met her father once. He's certainly white. The daughter wasn't born at that time, but her mother was an Englishwoman and a cousin of your own. It's most unlikely that the girl is black."

"Even so," said Norheys, "she'll be more or less savage, and I don't care for savages. It's not that I'm particularly keen on civilization. What I always say about that is that a lot of it is rather rot. Still, that's a different thing from marrying a savage. A girl ought to wear corsets, you know, and go to a decent dressmaker."

"You're wrong about that," I said. "The Central European aristocracy—and that's the class she belongs to—are quite civilized. She probably speaks half a dozen languages and gets her frocks from Paris—or used to. She can't now, poor thing, for her father is stony broke. That's the reason she's had to take to dancing. And I'm told that she's quite a good looking girl."

"She may be," said Norheys, "but my point is—that is to say, what I really feel is—"

There he stopped.

"If she isn't black," I said, "and isn't tattooed, and has ordinary manners, and wears corsets, which I'm perfectly certain she does, I don't see what your objection is."

"The fact is," said Norheys, "that I'm engaged to be married to Miss Temple."

"Did you tell your uncle that?" I asked.

"No, I didn't. I didn't want to ruffle the old boy, and that would have ruffled him. My idea is that you might break it to him, gently, don't you know, so as not to give him a shock. What I always say is this—if there's a jarring kind of thing which has to be said, it's better for a fellow to get some one else to say it."

"You realize of course," I said, "that if you refuse to marry Princess Calypso you can't be king of Lystria."

"I'd be sorry for that. I don't mind saying that I'd rather like to be king of that country. If Viola and I could go there together—"

"Viola?"

"That's Miss Temple. If she and I could set up there as king and queen, we could have a high old time and really make things hum. Viola would make a splendid queen, absolutely top hole."

"You may put that idea out of your head at once," I said.

"Uncle Ned and that stockbroker friend of his could have all the oil. We shouldn't want a drop for ourselves, and I'd make the good old Lystrians dig like the devil. You might try to get Uncle Ned to look at it from that point of view."

"It won't do," I said. "It really won't."

"I don't see why not. I mean to say I think it might be worked if we went the right way about it. I'm not much of a whale on court etiquette and ecclesiastical law but I've always had a notion that there's some sort of recognized dodge by which you can be married on the double if you're a king, both marriages being perfectly O. K."

"There are morganatic marriages," I said. "It's a left-handed and unsatisfactory arrangement. I don't think you ought to ask Miss Temple to agree to it."

"I wasn't thinking of asking her. The very last thing I want to do is to put Viola into an awkward position. In fact, I wouldn't do it, not even to please Uncle Ned. My idea is to marry her in St. George's, Hanover square, with a bishop and bridesmaids and all complete. The other one, this Calypso girl, that Uncle Ned is so keen on, could be the morgan—what-do-you-call-it? I don't suppose she'd mind."

"My dear Norheys," I said, "she's a princess, the daughter of a man who was a European sovereign until a few years ago."

"I don't believe a black princess would be as particular as all that. Look here, Uncle Bill, you've always been jolly good to me and all that. Just you put the morganatic scheme up to Uncle Ned. Be as persuasive as you can. I expect he'll see his way to work it somehow. But you must make it quite clear that there's to be no hanky-panky about Viola's position. She may or may not be queen of Lystria, but she's jolly well going to be marchioness of Norheys."

"I'll speak to your uncle about it," I said, "but it won't be the slightest use. The thing's impossible."

"I don't see why. Lots of these sultans and pashas and people have whole harems full of wives. I don't want to go as far as that. At the same time, if they can do it, why can't I?"

"Nobody's proposing to set you up on the throne of a Moslem state," I said. "Lystria is a Christian country."

"Oh, come now. Christian. You can't call those countries Christian. Hang it all, Uncle Bill, it was only last week I gave a fellow a subscription to a missionary society especially to convert the heathen. He wouldn't want to convert them if they were Christians already, would he?"

"There's an archbishop there," I said. "A patriarch, which is a superior kind of archbishop. His name is Menelaus."

"Sounds to me like Greek grammar," said Norheys, "for the matter of that, so does Calypso, and I've always barred learning Greek grammar."

> Norheys evidently is not strong on geography but his heart seems to be all right. What's the next development?

Mother Had to Wait for "Engagement" Ring

I married a young man not greatly blessed with worldly goods, says a writer in the Washington Star. It taxed his financial resources to the uttermost to start even our modest housekeeping, so our engagement was not sealed with the customary ring, although I did have a small wedding ring.

During our early married life we had to work and plan to make just a poor living for our three little girls, for although John's salary increased, so did living expenses, and luxuries were unknown.

Soon after our eldest daughter became engaged, John made quite a sum of money on a business deal. One evening he came home with an expensive looking ring box, and, opening it, showed us a beautiful diamond ring. We all supposed it to be an engagement present for daughter. She looked complacent, while the younger girls were frankly envious.

My heart fluttered when John interrupted with: "Here, wait a minute. That's mother's engagement ring. Goodness knows she's waited long enough for it, but now's the first time I've been able to afford the kind she deserves."

POULTRY ◆ FACTS ◆

RHODE ISLAND REDS NEW POPULAR BREED

The Rhode Island Reds are the newest of the popular breeds of general-purpose fowls. The breed originated in Rhode Island, where it was developed by farmers engaged in poultry raising. The Malay, Buff Cochin, Buff Leghorn and Wyandotte are said to have been used in its development. In type the Rhode Island Red has a rather long, rectangular body, and is somewhat rangier in appearance than the Plymouth Rock or Wyandotte. The hens are good layers and the breed makes a good table fowl. There are two varieties, the rose and single combed. The Rhode Island Whites are a more recent breed developed with similar type.

The Wyandotte is a rose-combed breed and is characterized as a breed of curves. The body is somewhat round and is set lower on the legs than the Plymouth Rock. The feathers are less compact than the Rhode Island Red and its general shape and feathering gives it the appearance of being short backed and short bodied. The Wyandotte was developed in the United States and the blood of the Dark Brahma, the Silver-Spangled Hamburg and the Buff Cochin played a part in its origin. The varieties are white, buff, silver, golden, partridge, silver penciled, Columbian and black.

The Plymouth Rock has for many years been the most popular breed of general-purpose fowls. It is a breed which originated in the United States, and it is probable that the blood of the Dominique, Black Cochin, Black Java, Brahma and Pit Game was used in its development. The breed is good sized, rather long bodied, with fairly prominent breast and good depth, showing a well-rounded carcass when dressed. The varieties of the Plymouth Rock are barred, white, buff, silver penciled, partridge and Columbian.

Way to Raise Chicks

Purdue university gives the following points for the proper raising and brooding of chicks:

Hatching only from mature, selected, brood-tested males and females.

Brooding chicks with a hard coal stove in a portable brooder house on new disease free soil.

Reducing brooder temperature from 100 degrees (at edge of hover) after the first week as rapidly as the comfort of chicks permits.

Getting chicks out on the ground when a week old even though weather is chilly.

Giving nothing to drink but skim milk, buttermilk or semi-solid for at least the first month.

Giving no feed or drink till chicks are 48 hours old. For the first few days it is safest to feed only the finely cracked chick grains giving only what is cleaned up in about twenty minutes.

Giving no mash the first five days. After this start gradually on mash, always preceding the mash with a grain feed to prevent overfeeding on the mash.

Placing chicks on full mash feed after the second week and reducing at same time grain feeds to only two or three times per day.

Sand Supplies Grit

Cover the brooder floor with sand and then several inches of chaff from the clover mow. Do not have dust in the chaff, but the fine particles of the clover heads and straws. This gives the chicks something to scratch in to hunt for their grain feed. Do not use sawdust on the brooder floor, as the chicks are apt to eat this and cause trouble. The sand is good for them, as it supplies grit so necessary in digesting their feed.

Poultry Notes

When chicks are penned keep grits, oyster shell and sand before them all the time. Pulverized charcoal, too, should be in easy access, as it aids digestion.

A runway covered with fencing wire is a lot cheaper for chicks than to lose them to attacks of cats and other enemies of chicks.

Many breeders will not undertake to raise chicks without sour milk as the first feed and continued right along with the grain feeds.

Do you know how much net profit your hens are returning? Farmers all over the country are learning it is worth the time they spend to keep a close count on the eggs their hens produce and the cost per dozen.

Geese should not be used for breeding purposes until they are two years old. A gander may be used the first season. Geese eggs may be hatched in an incubator, but better results are obtained by setting the eggs under geese or hens. The eggs hatch in from 27 to 33 days.

The best hen is the one that eats the most and turns the food into eggs.

The average poultry man hates to kill the weak and crippled chicks. The usual method is to let them live on in the hope that they will recover, a desire that is seldom realized. Many have simply been deformed at hatching time. If such could be placed by themselves, and given special treatment, many of them would live and eventually make good market birds. A twisted foot or wing would not hinder growth.

Gave Visitor New Idea of Mistral

Eugene Higgins at a luncheon on his yacht Thalassa, anchored in the Nice harbor, said of the Riviera winter climate:

"I like the winter climate here; it resembles a brilliant October day at home; but I hate that cold, fierce wind, the mistral. It's the Riviera's one fault.

"One day on the Promenade des Anglais I met a Nicois in a raging mistral.

"'Glorious day,' he said, holding his hat on with one hand and wiping the dust out of his eyes with the other. 'Grand weather.'

"In the cold blasts of the mistral the palms swished wildly. The sea was white with foam. Dust clouds raced past us, carrying hats and parasols and newspapers.

"'Grand weather?' said I. 'With a wind like this?'

"'Wind?' laughed the Nicois. 'This isn't a wind. This is our mistral, our splendid mistral, which makes us southern French so healthy and intelligent and successful.'"

The teacher, prompted by superior authority had asked permission, by letter, of a girl's parents to have her take the Shick test. The permission was refused by the child's mother in a letter which ran as follows:

"I received your letter asking to have my girl take the Sheek test. I will not have my girl take no Sheek test. I have seen that Sheek at the theater, and I will have nothing to do with no test of his."—Smart Set.

Let Tanlac restore your health

IF your body is all fagged-out and run-down, if you are losing weight steadily, lack appetite, have no strength or energy—why not let Tanlac help you back to health and strength?

So many millions have been benefited by the Tanlac treatment, so many thousands have written to testify to that effect that it's sheer folly not to make the test.

Tanlac, you know, is a great natural tonic and builder, a compound, after the famous Tanlac formula, of roots, barks and herbs. It purges the blood stream, revitalizes the digestive organs and enables the sickly body to regain its vanished weight.

You don't need to wait long to get results. Tanlac goes right to the seat of trouble. In a day or so you note a vast difference in your condition. You have more appetite, sleep better at night and the color begins to creep back into your washed-out cheeks.

Don't put off taking Tanlac another precious day. Step into the nearest drug store and get a bottle of this world-famed tonic. That's the first important step back to health and vigor.

Tanlac Restored Her Health

"Typhoid fever reduced me to 95 lbs. and left me weak as a rag. Failing to get relief from other sources I tried Tanlac and after 6 bottles had gained 20 lbs. Now I enjoy a fine appetite and feel like a new woman. As a nurse I give Tanlac to all my patients."

The editor of the Camden Advance has this to say concerning Decoration day in Camden: "Decoration day is Saturday. But very little patriotic spirit will be shown here for some reason. Its a shame that this memorial day is fast retrograding in small communities. One of the main reasons is that the public schools do not take an active part as they did a few years ago when school closed after Decoration day. This world is advancing on high speed now days and it don't seem to have time for observing this most sacred day in the year."

Right here we want to say to our subscribers we will never again publish the advertising of Piano Houses in Detroit or elsewhere who claim they have a piano in the vicinity of North Adams, which has been bought on a contract but the buyer lapsed in the payment. After some investigation we have found that both Cable and Grinnell's Piano Houses in Detroit have published such ads when they had no such pianos in this vicinity but would sell customers instruments out of stock in their warehouses either at Hillsdale, Jackson or Coldwater. Complaints have been made to us of misrepresentation, and we do not care to advertise any crooks, hence we shall refuse their ads in the future.

What Are You Worth?

Fat enough for 7 bars of soap.

Iron enough for a medium sized nail.

Sugar enough to fill a shaker.

Lime enough to whitewash a chicken coop.

Phosphorous enough for 2,200 match tips.

Magnesium enough for a dose of magnesia.

Potassium enough to explode a toy cannon.

Sulphur enough to rid a dog of fleas. Water enough for one Saturday night bath.

The whole collection is worth 98 cents and that, in a day when things were much higher than they used to be. The only additional ingredient is Gumption. According to the amount that is mixed in with other things you are worth 20c an hour. It pays to add plenty of gumption.

Memorial Day Proclamation

By the Governor

The march of the Grand Army of the Republic is nearly over. The vast and sturdy ranks of a generation ago have dwindled to a hazy line of aged but exalted veterans. Time was when men from their own ranks decorated the graves of their fallen comrades and glorified the deeds of living warriors. This duty has now fallen upon the citizens of a grateful republic. Once each year as long as this, the happiest, mightiest, and most righteous of all nations endures, we will be called upon to honor not only the valor of veterans of the Civil War, but to pay homage to soldiers of all other conflicts of the nation. In peace with all the world, our tribute to the honored dead and the surviving veterans who made our happiness possible, should this year be more impressive than ever before.

Therefore, I, Alexander J. Groesbeck, as Governor of Michigan, proclaim and urge a proper observance of Saturday, May 30, 1925, as Memorial Day.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State this thirteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord, one thousand, nine hundred and twenty-five.

ROLAND BENGE

Why He Advertised

William P. Rigley, the famous millionaire chewing gum magnate, started his propaganda in a small way—fully as small as the goods he put out. He had no expansive bill boards with fiaring posters; he couldn't buy a page in Collier's or Saturday Evening Post. But did use a few lines in the news column. He sold a good many millions sticks of gum. He kept advertising and selling, until to-day behold the result! In New York City alone Mr. Wrigley owns valuable properties, yet the business keeps increasing. Just think of it! He must depend on sales of 1 cent each for his profits.

If you knew what it costs Rigley to finance one advertising campaign, you would marvel that so many jaw wags could be sold in America. When you see the little green devils and the spears you know what it means before yeu have read a word. That little trade mark reaches around the world. It sells the goods.

One day a man asked Mr. Wrigley why he wanted to keep advertising when his business was so good. Pointing to a line of stationary freight cars on the side track he said: "There is a train of cars absolutely useless—nothing to pull it; nothing to push it. It may stand there till doomsday, because it has no engine. My business is like the train. Its power to move is advertising. Take away the engine and it stops and stagnates." There are a few stagnant places of business in North Adams, and if they don't wake up soon, the cobwebs will be stretched across the door.

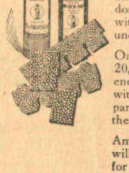
Winterproof Roofs

It takes a roof of real quality to live through many winters of the sort enjoyed along our northern border. From December to March these roofs are subjected to high winds, snow, sleet, hail, with an occasional thaw to make matters worse.

It is for this reason that so many homes in this section are covered with Ruberoid Shingles and Roofing. The illustrations above—taken from actual photographs—especially the close-up of the dormer, show what these roofs have to put up with. Yet Ruberoid Shingles and Roofing thrive under just such punishment.

On many a building there are Ruberoid Roofs, 20, 25, and 30 years old with the limit of their endurance still to be determined. They have withstood the wear and tear of the elements in all parts of the world—in the Tropics and beyond the Arctic Circle.



Among the Ruberoid Products there is one which will fully meet your requirements, whether it be for a twenty-room residence or a three-room bungalow, a schoolhouse or a factory, a church or a theatre.

Come in or phone us today for samples and descriptive folders.

There is but one Ruberoid. Look for the Man on the Label.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

World Awaiting Word From the Amundsen-Ellsworth North Pole Flight.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THE success or failure of the Amundsen-Ellsworth attempt to fly to the North pole may be made known to the world at any moment. On the other hand, the fate of the daring explorers may remain shrouded in the mists and snowstorms of the Arctic regions for several weeks or even for months. At this writing, one week after the departure of the two planes from Spitzbergen, no sign has been received from Captain Amundsen and his companions. This does not necessarily mean that they have met with disaster, for it is announced by Bernon S. Prentice of New York, brother-in-law of Lincoln Ellsworth, that Amundsen planned to go on to Alaska if he was successful in locating the North pole, and if conditions were favorable. Though it may have been necessary to make landings and though this may have wrecked the planes, the party was fully equipped for the attempt to return to civilization on foot and had food supplies for one month.

Polar experts said it was too soon to send out relief expeditions, but already movements are on foot to that end, both in America and in Norway. Amundsen and Ellsworth, before they started, appointed an advisory committee on relief, of which Mr. Prentice, mentioned above, is the chairman. The Norwegian government says it is ready, at a moment's notice, to send out a relief expedition. President Coolidge and all other American government officials are intensely interested and will see that this country gives whatever aid is necessary and practicable. Suggestions that either the Los Angeles or the Shenandoah, dirigibles, be sent to the Arctic, do not meet with official approval.

Capt. Donald MacMillan, who is himself to lead an Arctic expedition soon, said to officers of the National Geographic society: "If Amundsen is to return to civilization in the flesh, he must make a quick get-away. The ice area is rapidly expanding in the Arctic circle and every day of delay adds to the hazards of the situation that confronts him."

ALBERT B. FALL, former secretary of the interior, and Harry F. Sinclair and Edward L. Doheny, oil magnates, have been indicted again by a grand jury in Washington in connection with the Teapot Dome affair. These indictments are substitutes for those recently quashed on the ground that a government legal representative was illegally present in the jury room when they were voted. In general the former charges are repeated, but the Sinclair indictment charges new overt acts in addition to those set forth in the indictment of last year. Chief among these is the alleged passage of $230,500 in Liberty bonds from Sinclair to Fall through the Continental Trading company, Ltd., a Canadian corporation.

Out in Los Angeles, Federal Judge P. J. McCormick rendered a decision in the Doheny lease case, ordering the Doheny interests to surrender for cancellation their leases in the Elk Hills naval reserve No. 1 and their contracts for construction of oil-storage facilities at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. The leases were declared void both because of "fraud upon the United States" and because the transfer of leasing authority to the Interior department was irregular. A financial settlement for oil taken out and for construction work done in Hawaii was ordered.

ALL this country, at least, is becoming deeply interested in the coming trial of John T. Scopes, biology instructor in a school of Dayton, Tenn., for violating the state law which forbids the teaching of the theory of evolution in public schools. It is a test case, deliberately arranged by Mr. Scopes and his friends, and he is assured of the support of scientists and others who welcome the issue between liberalism and fundamentalism. The fundamentalists will be commanded, presumably, by the perennial William J. Bryan, though it is not certain the local prosecuting attorneys will be willing to surrender chief place to him. The indictment of Mr. Scopes by the grand jury at Dayton was a foregone conclusion, for there is no attempt to claim that he did not violate the statute. The fight, of course, centers on the constitutionality of the law. The little Tennessee town is preparing for a great influx of visitors and it may be that a huge temporary arena will be constructed for the trial, which is to open July 10.

Clarence Darrow, noted Chicago lawyer, and Dudley Field Malone, leading attorney for the American divorce colony in Paris, have been suggested as counsel to aid the defense of Scopes. But Mr. Darrow is known to be a skeptic and Mr. Malone has been somewhat tinged with political pink, and as the Tennesseeans who will make up the jury are certain to be both of a religious turn of mind and conservative, it is unlikely those lawyers will be considered available. The American Civil Liberties union is really back of the case, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science is taking a deep interest in it, though so far not officially.

VICE PRESIDENT DAWES HAS carried his fight for revision of senate rules into the Southland. Last week he addressed the Associated Industries of Alabama in Birmingham, and told his hearers that "the South is too intelligent to be deluded into the idea that to protect it against another Force bill the right at times should be given to a minority, or even one senator, to throw a monkey wrench into the legislative machinery of the common government.

Answering critics of the reform campaign, he said that unlimited debate "had not checked multiplicity of laws but had resulted in their passage without proper consideration." He referred to the Force bill, beaten by a filibuster, as "a wrong measure" which would have been repealed if passed. This isolated argument of proponents of present rules, he declared, was an effort intended "to affect the great intelligent South and to revive those unhappy issues which have died alike in the North and South."

He said he was asking only that the minority, "protected as it is by the checks and balances of the Constitution, shall not exercise veto rights over the will of a majority when that majority desires only to exercise its constitutional rights of legislation."

Senator Underwood, who preceded General Dawes on the platform, praised his efforts to procure rules that would limit debate in the senate. Opposition to the proposal, he said, comes from two sources: From some of the senators themselves, "because they enjoy debate and like unlimited discussion," and from "those persons outside the senate who are interested in special legislation or, more particularly, in preventing legislation to which they are opposed."

PUBLICATION by newspapers of income tax lists is declared lawful by the Supreme Court of the United States. The court affirmed decisions of lower courts in the cases brought against the Kansas City Journal-Post and the Baltimore Post. The opinion, written by Justice Sutherland, held that the information, as made available to public inspection and the terms of the revenue act of 1924 "cannot be regarded otherwise than as public property, to be passed on to others as freely as the possessor of it may choose."

It was added that "the contrary view requires a very dry and literal reading of the statute, quite inconsistent with its legislative history and the known and declared objects of its framers."

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE did not approve of the plans of the War department to have a second national defense test on Armistice day, and suggested that July 4 would be a better date. His preference will be complied with, although the time remaining to prepare for the demonstration is exceedingly short.

OFFICIAL reports from Tokyo give the number of dead in the recent earthquake in Japan as 278. Many thousands of others were rendered homeless and the property damage was enormous. The district most affected was that around Osaka, Kobe and Kyoto, on the west coast. Several villages were destroyed, but there was little damage in the larger cities. The most tragic scenes were at Kimosaki, a spa where hundreds of visitors were taking the hot baths. The pavilions all collapsed and many persons were scalded to death.

NOTWITHSTANDING their reported victories over the Riffians, the French are having a strenuous time in Morocco. Abd-el-Krim hangs on like a leach and is said to be preparing his forces for a great offensive, and meanwhile the French troops have been drawn back behind a defensive line and are constructing powerful fortifications. There were stories, unconfirmed, that France and Spain were ready to negotiate a peace with the Riff chieftain. The truth, as it came out in a heated debate in the French parliament, seems to be that Abd-el-Krim sent an emissary to Marshal Lyautey to endeavor to reach an agreement as to the frontier. The Riffians are short of food supplies because the French have established an effective blockade. But they are planning to raid the Ouergha region. It is said a large body of trained German officers is on its way to serve under Krim. The French Communists insist that peace must be made with the Riffians, and when the chamber of deputies was called on to vote a credit of 30,000,000 francs for the campaign they made such a riotous demonstration that M. Herriot, president of the chamber, suspended the session. There was, however, no doubt that the government would be sustained.

ANOTHER deplorable coal mine disaster, this time in North Carolina. Near Coal Glen at least sixty miners were entombed by three explosions that wrecked the shaft, and at this writing there is little or no hope that any of them have survived. Six bodies had been recovered, but the rescue crews had penetrated to the 1,800-foot level without finding any more.

FUNDAMENTALISTS and moderates in the Presbyterian church crossed swords in the general assembly in Columbus, Ohio, and such great differences of policy developed that there are predictions of a long-continued controversy in the church and of possible litigation. The New York presbytery, which is liberal, is fighting to stay in the church and to assure for all presbyteries the rights which it says are given by the constitution of the denomination. If the New Yorkers should be forced out, a legal battle might result to determine the ownership of church property. A conservative element, led by Moderator Charles R. Erdman, pins its hopes for church unity on a special commission which was named to study ways of "assuring the peace, purity, unity and progress of the church" and to report to the next assembly.

DR. ERNEST DE WITT BURTON, president of the University of Chicago, was one of the most notable of death's victims during the week. He had been ill for a long time and succumbed after surgical operations. Others who passed away were: Field Marshal French, earl of Ypres, who commanded the "Old Contemptibles," England's first army in the World war, and who won fame in previous campaigns; Col. C. A. Repington, noted British war correspondent and writer on military topics, and Louis Falk, long one of America's foremost organists.

FRANK M. SURFACE, an economist of the United States grain administration, has made a report, approved by Secretary Hoover, designed to disprove the theory of American farmers that wheat would have gone to $3 or more in war time if the government had not fixed the price at $2.20. The report declares that world conditions probably would have forced the price of 1917 wheat down to $1.50 per bushel and that the action of the government in establishing a minimum of $2.20 saved many millions of dollars for American farmers.

Secretary of Agriculture Jardine visited Chicago last week to hold secret conferences with board of trade officials for the purpose of bringing about the "house cleaning" which he had demanded.

Would Gather Data to Aid Future Historian

Washington.—Erection here of a modern archives building as an aid to future historians is urged by Capt. Dudley Knox, head of the navy's historical section, and by other officials supervising government records.

Captain Knox cited the existence of 990 separate collections as tending to make the preparation of accurate histories difficult and unnecessarily expensive.

Information relating to early American naval activity is contained in the files of the Departments of State and Treasury, as well as the pension office, but much data also is cared for by the states, by private societies and individuals.

It was the custom for captains of vessels and commanders of squadrons to consider records of their administration as something personal, Captain Knox said, and there was justification in this, inasmuch as those officers were held to a degree of financial accountability. The result was to scatter official documents in various families throughout the land, and the department frequently hears of the papers of old-time naval officers being sold at auction.

In 1911 congress authorized $30,000 for a commission to make photostatic copies from the existing archives, but only the states of Massachusetts, Virginia and North Carolina had been reached when the World war eclipsed this activity and the funds became exhausted.

"SIMPLY ROTTEN"

SYNOPSIS.—In London the teller of the story of the adventures of "King Tommy," and known hereafter as "Uncle Bill," is informed by Lord Norheys, son of an old friend, that Lord Troyte, head of the British foreign office, Norheys' uncle, has a scheme to make him (Norheys) king of Lystria, in central Europe, through marriage to Calypso, daughter of King Wladislaws, deposed monarch of that country. A financier, Procopius Cable, knows there is oil in profusion in Lystria, and with an English king on the throne the output could be secured for England. Norheys, in love with a stage dancer, Viola Temple, is not enthusiastic over the proposition. The patriarch, Menelaus, highest ecclesiastical dignitary in Lystria, is heartily in favor of the restoration of the monarchy, and Cable has generously financed the sentiment. Calypso is making a living dancing in the "Mascotte," Berlin cabaret. Norheys refuses to entertain the idea of giving up Viola Temple, to whom he is secretly engaged. "Uncle Bill's" sister Emily urges him to secure a passport from Lord Troyte for a certain Janet Church, strongminded female who wants to visit Lystria in the interests of a society for world peace.

CHAPTER IV

I found a letter from my sister Emily waiting for me when I got home.

"I want you," she wrote "to use your influence with Edmund Troyte to get a passport to Megalia for Janet Church. You remember Janet, I'm sure."

I remembered Janet Church perfectly well. She is a bony lowland Scot, and when I met her at Emily's house she was touring Ireland on behalf of a temperance society. I remember her saying at dinner that she would rather put a red-hot poker into her mouth than a glass of wine. That, I am sure, was not true. However much she might dislike wine she could always spit it out again. She could not spit out a red-hot poker.

"Janet Church," Emily went on, "is going to Megalia as the representative of the Society for the Establishment of World Peace through the influence of the Union Christian churches. There seems to be a wonderful opening in Lystria, which is now part of the Republic of Megalia. The present patriarch—"

According to Emily, the present patriarch is a man of singularly plastic mind, willing to unite his church with any other in the interests of world peace.

I put Emily's letter into a nice, flat varnished basket which stands on my writing table and is meant to contain unanswered letters. Emily gave me that basket last year as a Christmas present. I was glad to be able to use it for a letter of hers. I had of course no intention whatever of asking Troyte to get a passport for Janet Church.

But I did not get rid of the business so easily as that. Next day Janet Church called on me. In appearance she was just as I remembered her, in determination rather worse. The passport to Megalia had been refused. She attributed that to the hatred which the Foreign office felt to the idea of a world peace and to Lord Edmund Troyte's dread of the influence of a union of the Christian churches.

I dare say she was right in blaming Troyte. Knowing what he did about the condition of Lystria, he cannot possibly have wanted to add to the confusion of the coming revolution by letting loose an earnest Scotchwoman in the country. Also he probably thought that the Patriarch Menelaus would be too much occupied preparing for a royal marriage and coronation to have any time to spare for planning a world union of Christian churches.

"With the peace of Europe hanging in the balance," Janet said, "and the prospect of another war within ten years, it is of vital importance that the influence of the Christian churches, of all of them—"

"All," I murmured sympathetically, "all, all."

"Should be brought to bear on our statesmen. And how is that to be done?"

"Only," I said, "by means of a union of Christian churches."

"Especially the Church of Lystria," said Janet.

I could not see why the Lystrian church, which must be quite a small body, should be so very important. But Janet Church evidently thought it was. So, dare say, did Emily.

"Couldn't you," I said, "write to the patriarch instead of going to see him?" His name is Menelaus. A letter addressed to His Beatitude the Patriarch Menelaus, Lystria, would be sure to find him."

"A personal interview is indispensable."

If the patriarch is the least like Troyte in character, or like me, Janet Church may have one personal interview with him but will certainly not have another. I suppose she realized that she was not likely to get into my flat again, for she refused to leave until I had promised to do what I could with Troyte about the passport.

I kept the promise and made an appeal to Troyte.

"I know all about that woman," he said. "She makes trouble wherever she goes. I can't have letters coming to me by every courier from all the legations in Europe asking me to keep that woman at home."

"If you set any value on your own peace and mine," I said, "you'll give her a passport to Lystria and then keep her there."

"I wish," said Troyte, "that all religious women were in Heaven."

"If you let her go to Lystria," I said, "she probably will be in Heaven soon. I don't know the patriarch personally, but he'll execute her before she's been a week there if he's half as savage as Norheys says."

Troyte asked what Norheys had been saying about the patriarch. I could only reply that I was mistaken in saying that he thought about the patriarch at all. The person he called savage was the princess.

"He seems quite sure," I said, "that she's black."

"He knows perfectly well that she's nothing of the sort," said Troyte. That's merely an excuse to get out of marrying her."

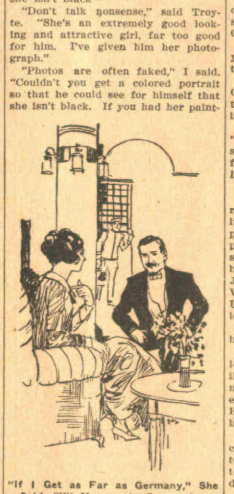
"I suppose you know," I said, "that he's formally engaged to Miss Temple and means to marry her."

"We must get him out of the entanglement," said Troyte. "And the best way of doing it is to push on the marriage with the Princess Calypso."

"Until you've convinced him that she isn't black—"

"Don't talk nonsense," said Troyte. "She's an extremely good looking and attractive girl, far too good for him. I've given him her photograph."

"Photos are often faked," I said. "Couldn't you get a colored portrait so that he could see for himself that she isn't black. If you had her painted in an evening dress it would go some way to relieve his mind about the tattooing. He'd know that her arms and neck were clear, anyhow."



"If I Get as Far as Germany," She Said, "I'll Manage to Go on Somehow."

"I wish you wouldn't be flippant," said Troyte. "This is rather a serious business. There's the question of oil—a matter of imperial interest, and Cable says he's pushed things on so far that Lystria is on the verge of a revolution. I really don't know what would happen if the patriarch and Count Casimir were to bring off their coup d'etat and there was no king to put on the throne."

"I wonder," I said, "if anything in the way of a morganatic marriage could be arranged?"

"Certainly not."

"It's sometimes done," I said. "I'm sure I've heard of cases."

"Certainly not. The last king, Wladislaws, was far too fond of that sort of thing. His life was a scandal, and the patriarch was on the verge of excommunicating him several times. The patriarch holds very strong views on the sanctity of marriage and—and—all cognate subjects."

"If the patriarch is the sort of a man who would tackle a king," I said, "he'll probably be able to deal with Janet Church. Why not give her a passport? Look here, Troyte, let's compromise. I'll say no more about Miss Temple and the morganatic marriage if you'll let Janet Church go to Lystria. She'll worry the life out of me if you don't."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said Troyte. "I'll let her have a passport to Germany, but not an inch farther. She can go to Berlin if she likes and stay there."

"That's something," I replied. "She'll be out of London anyhow."

"I'm sorry for the Germans," said Troyte.

"Oh, they deserve it. After all, what's the use of our having won the war if we can't do anything afterward to make them feel uncomfortable?"

I called on Janet Church in her hotel and told her my news. I was afraid she would be furious with Troyte for limiting her wanderings. To my surprise she took it very well.

"If I get as far as Germany," she said, "I'll manage to go on somehow."

"Well," I said, "good-by and good luck. If you find yourself languishing in a Siberian dungeon, send a line to the nearest British consul."

"I'm not going anywhere near Siberia," said Janet.

"You may not mean to," I said, "but you never know where you'll fetch up when you start traveling in the Near East."

CHAPTER V

Janet Church left London next day and I congratulated myself that I had escaped one worry. I actually enjoyed several peaceful days. Then Norheys came to me again.

"Did you tell Uncle Ned," he said, "that I'm going to marry Viola and no one else?"

"No, I didn't," I said. "I told him exactly what you said I was to tell him; that you were determined to marry Miss Temple, but were quite ready to marry anybody else as well."

Norheys grinned.

"How did he take that?" he asked.

"He said just what I expected him to say, that he'd never agree to your committing bigamy."

"If that's so," said Norheys, "it puts the lid on the whole black princess scheme. What I always say is this: a fellow ought to knuckle under his family—uncles and aunts and all that lot—so long as they're asking him to do the things which don't annoy him much; but as soon as they begin chipping in in really offensive ways then he oughtn't to. That's my idea of a fellow's duty, anyhow. I don't know if it's yours."

I said that a great deal depended on his definition of the word offensive, and that so far as I could see, Calypso was anything but that.

"Anyhow," said Norheys, "whether you agree with me or not, you can tell Uncle Ned what I say."

I did; and Troyte told Procopius Cable. Norheys was back with me two days later and this time he was in a really bad temper.

"Look here, Uncle Bill," he said, "I'm getting a bit fed up with this sort of thing. I don't say it's your fault, but there it is, and I'm d—d if I stand any more of it."

"What's happened to you now?"

"This way of going on is simply rotten," said Norheys. "As long as it was merely a matter of Uncle Ned persecuting me day and night and pelting me with oil paintings of Indian squaws, I didn't mind. But it's a bit too thick when he sets on a slimy Jewish money-lender to try bribing Viola to give me up. I didn't think Uncle Ned would have played it as low as that."

"I'm perfectly certain," I said, "that he never did any such thing."

Lord Edmund was extremely anxious to rescue the head of his family from an undesirable entanglement and he wanted to see Norheys established as a European sovereign. But he would not hire a Jew to offer bribes to Miss Temple.

"Anyhow," said Norheys, "the brute came, a fat flabby animal, and tried to persuade Viola to take a check for ten thousand pounds. If Uncle Ned didn't send him, who did?"

"Did you hear his name?"

"Yes, I did. He sent in his card to Viola and she kept it. Here it is."

He handed me a visiting card. I half expected the name I saw on it—Procopius Cable.

"That's the same swine," said Norheys, "who's doing the deal with Uncle Ned about the oil."

"Exactly. But I'm sure your uncle didn't send him to bribe Miss Temple."

Procopius Cable, eager to get at the Lystrian oil, had tired of Troyte's cautious diplomacy and begun to act for himself. He had made a mess of it, a far worse mess than I knew or guessed then.

It does look as if Procopius Cable had made a mess of things. And the result?

Queen Lover of Cherries

The rich and ruddy cherries for which England is famous, were introduced into that country from Flanders in the year 1540. The establishment of their popularity was due in no small measure to Queen Elizabeth who had a great liking for cherries ripe. Whereby hangs the tale of Sir Francis Carew, who delayed the ripening of his cherry tree until a month after the end of the season in order that the cherries might attain maturity when her majesty stayed with him. This he accomplished by erecting a tent over the tree, and on the queen's arrival the fruit was at perfection.

Large and Small Sums Swell Conscience Fund

At the United States Treasury department in Washington there is a conscience fund and it is growing rapidly. Conscience-stung individuals from all sections of the country, and even in foreign lands, frequently send in sums of money to make good frauds that they have perpetrated on Uncle Sam. Since the first contribution of five dollars more than 100 years ago, the fund has grown to nearly $600,000. Those who contribute to this fund hardly ever give their authentic names, and few go to the trouble to explain how they came to unjustly get into possession of government property or money.

These contributions have varied from a one-cent postage stamp to $30,000. At the present time, the annual receipts are said to amount to over $5,000. The largest contribution, that of $30,000, was accompanied by a brief note stating that it was the final installment on an $80,000 payment, which was four times the amount the sender had stolen. The most frequent contributors to this fund are little children who send in a few cents to make good canceled postage stamps which they have used illegally. These small remittances, it is said, are often accompanied by the most pathetic notes showing the mental tribulations suffered by the writers.—Pathfinder Magazine.

NOW DOES ALL HER WORK

Has No Backache, No Bad Feelings Because Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Drove Her Illness Away

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"I was in a badly run-down condition and I would get weak spells and terrible headaches. I felt so badly last year that I could not do any housecleaning. The minute I would lift or stoop it seemed as if I was going to fall to pieces. I told a neighbor how I felt and she said that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was surely the right thing for me. I took four bottles then and in the fall of the year I took three. I had been treated by a doctor but he gave me an iron tonic and that did not help me. It seemed that the tonic did not have in it what the Vegetable Compound did. That gave me the strength and ambition I needed and I have gained in weight. This year before I started to clean house I got four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and am taking it right along. I tell all my friends about it and how much good it does me. They can notice it because I have gained in weight. I weigh 118 now and do all my work myself again."—Mrs. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG, 651 37th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Radio Plumber

There was something wrong with the radio, and Tompkins had called in a friend, an amateur wireless expert, to advise him. It did not take the latter long to discover the seat of the trouble.

"It's quite an ordinary fault," he informed Tompkins. "Your aerial is leaking."

"Leaking," repeated Mrs. Tompkins, who was taking an intelligent interest in the proceedings, "What a pity we didn't know yesterday, when the plumber was here!"—Tit-Bits.

Nonbathing Bolshevik

The late August Belmont hated the Bolsheviks. Talking one day to a reporter about a Bolshevik agitator who was fleeing from state to state to escape arrest for arson, Mr. Belmont said.

"The fellow boasts that he never takes a bath; but he's been showing the world of late a remarkably clean pair of heels."

$25,000,000 Motor Road

A proposed $25,000,000 motor road from London to Brighton would take five lines of traffic without a speed limit and there would be no crossings, as the road would pass above or below existing thoroughfares.

A woman's idea of economy is buying things she doesn't need because they are cheap.

ALL WORN OUT?

Are you lame and stiff; tired, nervous and depressed; miserable with backache? Have you suspected your kidneys? Good health depends upon good elimination. But sluggish kidneys allow impurities to accumulate and upset the whole system. Backache is apt to follow; stabbing pains, depressing headaches, dizziness, and other annoying kidney irregularities. Why experiment? If your kidneys are sluggish, why not use Doan's Pills. Doan's is a harmless stimulant diuretic. Used the world over. Ask your neighbor!

A Michigan Case

George P. Washburn, retired farmer, 903 South Michigan, Avenue, Howell, Mich., says: "My back ached and when I did any bending, sharp, severe twinges took me across my kidneys and made it difficult to straighten. My kidneys were disordered and I had to get up during the night to pass the secretions. I started using Doan's Pills and a couple boxes cured me."

Wife's Old Love Affair

Nothing will ever convince me that husbands do not hate old love affairs in the history of their wives. Husbands have been trained by wives to say they do not care, but they do. If a woman has been engaged to two or three men before she finally lands one, and submitted to their endearments, it is a bad start.

In Sacramento a man quarreled with his stepson because he ate so much butter on his hot cakes, and the row ended in a divorce.

The man didn't object to the butter; he disliked his wife's former history; her former husband, the boy's father.—Designer Magazine.

MODEL FARM SHOWS WHAT ELECTRIC POWER CAN DO

Hardly a Man-Size Task or a Farm House Chore That Electric Motor Could Not Tackle With Success.

Just what electricity really can do on the farm, if it is given the chance, was disclosed at the recent State Farm Products Show held at Harrisburg, Pa. More than one hundred farm implements and farmhouse utensils operated by electricity were displayed.

Most of the several thousand visitors were surprised to notice how many things can be done on the farm and in the farm home by electricity once the electricity is available. Any farm that could afford to put electricity to work to such an extent as indicated on this model electric farm would find the day's work something to chuckle over instead of something to scowl at.

Those who managed this exhibit, however—the Giant Power Survey, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, Pennsylvania State College, Pennsylvania State Grange and Pennsylvania Electric Association—did not pretend for a moment that the average farmer could approach such an ideal condition as the model farm presented.

No farmer could stand the expense, nor have the power companies felt justified, in offering current at rates economically satisfactory.

The Harrisburg exhibit, however, showed that when the time comes on each farm, electricity can do almost anything that may be asked of it. Big tasks and little tasks, in field, barn and home, it was busy showing its strength and its adaptability. Each device was marked by a placard which gave the name of the appliance and the name of the manufacturer or agent.

There were electrical operations in progress in the barn, shed, yard, dairy, poultry house, workshop, garage and in practically every room of the farm house.

Typical of them all were the operations in the barn, shed and yard which included these electrically-driven appliances: Wood splitter, threshing machine and cleaner, concrete mixer, saw frame, floor machine for dairy work, grooming machine clipping machine, feed grinder, potato grader, exhaust fan, power hoist, pump jack, call and alarm siren, ensilage cutter and blower, hay baling press, fodder shredder, combination mill, bagger and carrier, thermocouple detector indicator, corn sheller and six ten-inch oscillating desk fans.

BEAT A BLIZZARD

Kansas blizzards have long been a dread of the farmer in the prairie country. Livestock and even human beings have been cut off from shelter and frozen to death. Hence the feelings of a farmer in Ellis County, Kansas, can be appreciated when he says:

"My electric installation paid for itself in one night during a sudden blizzard last winter. The big light on a high pole near the barn helped us to drive all the cows and calves to shelter. Without it many would have been frozen to death."

Nearly all the high wattage electric lights so far placed on poles in farm yards are Mazda lamps of 500 or even 1,000 watts. They were developed by General Electric engineers and scientists, who first brought Mazda lamps into existence. These same specialists are giving attention at present to the peculiar lighting problems which are met with on the farm.

He Cracks The Pope's Head Occasionally

On Monday morning Rev. F. F. DeLong of Fremont Indiana, arrived in North Adams accompanied by Miss Dunn a young lady whose former life has been mostly spent behind the bars of the parochial school and Nunnery. Miss Dunn is a very entertaining speaker and a singer, and she tells her experiences with the Roman Institutions with frankness and unreserve. If you are a 100 percent American or even just a common well-wisher of our country you should hear Rev. DeLong speak in the Catholic situation. He was in this town some fifteen years or so ago and it will be remembered he startled the country round about with his expounding of the terrible truths of Catholicism. We have often wondered and feared for his safety, but likely he is preserved by some overruling power.

On Monday evening he spoke to a good sized audience at the Baptist church but on account of so much open air work his voice is quite seriously impaired. Miss Dunn however, furnished most of the diversion telling her experiences and the results of her quitting the Roman faith in her own family.

On Wednesday afternoon she addressed a large concourse of women at the church on the "Inside of the Confessional" that much talked-of institution of the Roman church. Miss Dunn states that there is no Priest whose everday life is what it should be and among other matters said the Priest usually kept a young lady housekeeper and was alone with her most of the time. They tell us that at the Confessional the young ladies of the Catholic church are supposed to tell the Priest every act good, bad or indifferent, which has been committed since their last meeting with him, and that such is the faith, that very seldom is the conversation of the confessional ever exposed to the world. Results can well be imagined with the class of men these fellows are sometimes found to be. When we stop to consider that from their earliest infancy these girls are taught to obey and reverence the Priest's every command, we get slightly roiled at what might take place if the "Howly Father" was not a man of high moral standards, Rev. Frank DeLong has for many years been cracking the pates of the followers of Rome in this country, and we note that some of the knocks produce results. He tells of twenty one girls in all rescued from Papal prisons where they were practically slaves to the whims of more or less morally rotten red necked Priests of the faith. Rev. DeLong and Miss Dunn are both very entertaining speakers and the fact that they speak from the "Know Thyself" standpoint is a winner. They represent the Public School Defense League.

The Vandercook Lake Scandal

Jackson Daily News articles would lead one to believe that owners of buildings in and about Hague Park were all crooks. That paper has recently taken up the cudgel against the police force of Jackson county and of the State of Michigan with the result some startling disclosures are in order. At the time of the burning of Hague Park buildings much sympathy as expressed for the owner Charles O'Dell in his unfortunate losses, especially as it was impossible to get the Jackson Fire Department to come out of the city. Some time later the large barn of Mr. Lee burned to the ground in the daytime. The Jackson News is now trying to wake up citizens of the county by connecting Mr. O'Dell and Mr. Lee with the burnings. If this be true there is reason to believe also that other fires in the vicinity were cooked-up jobs. If the officials of the State of Michigan are conversant with affairs at Vandercook's and fully cognizant then it is up to the Department of Justice to take a hand in the matter

The State of Michigan is about to spend $90,000 on barracks for the state police at East Lansing. Well, guess it costs something to support this branch of the government you bet. And what does it get the people of this commonwealth? We'll say it means something to be well guarded. We'll say it means something to be able to say that crime usually gets a crimp in its back when the troopers get after it! We'll say that bootleggers and h och peddlers get cold chills when the state police go on the war path. We'll say that speeders quit speeding and drunks quit jay riding also. Guess it pays!

New Gun Law

Every person owning a revolver or a gun under 30 inches in length is required by law to register it with the proper authorities by July 1, according to a new set of laws received by Sheriff Stoddard Tuesday. Everyone living in the country has to register their firearms with the sheriff, and everyone living in the city has to register them with the chief of police.

People are not allowed to carry a gun in their automobiles, without a license, under the new law. This law does not hold it necessary to carry a revolver in an automobile, as in the home for protection of property. A person may have a gun in the home without having a license, but it must be registered according to the new law.

Licenses to carry concealed weapons are issued to city residents by a board comprised of the chief of police and the prosecutor. A board comprised of the sheriff and the prosecutor issues the licenses to residents in the country. Applications are made to the chief of police and the sheriff, and these officers refer them over to the prosecutor, who grants or refuses the request.

Application blanks for registration have been sent for, and will be here within 10 days.

Any person selling a gun is required to give the name, address and other data of the purchaser. and sign three copies. Within 30 days the vendor has to send one copy to the secretary of state by registered mail, one copy to the sheriff or chief of police, and retain the other copy for himself.

Death of An Old Wheatland Resident

Dwight Curtis, aged 90 years, died Saturday night last at about eight o'clock at his home east of this village. He had been in poor health for some time having met with two accidents at different times which left him in very poor physical condition. Some years ago he was riding to the Hillsdale Fair in an auto when the machine was struck by another machine. and Mr. Curtis injured.

He was born in the state of New York near Rochester October 25th 1834, came to Michigan with his parents in 1851, settling in Hillsdale county. After the death of his father and brother, he conducted the business started by his father—viz, that of breeding high grade Shorthorn cettle for the market, and for which the Curtis homestead has been famous for 40 years

The farm is known as one of the best and most highly improved in the community, being equipped with large and commodious barns and splendid brick residence. Notwithstanding the years have made some changes in the buildings, it is yet a beautiful farm home.

Mr. Curtis was at one time an officer of the Hillsdale Fair and it is said he placed the Society on a prosperous basis. He was also an official of the Addison Benk which he established.

Funeral services were held at the late home Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 Rev. McLouth officiating and interment was in the Pease cemetery.

Gassed Soldier and Wife Receive Aid

A young man who has been gassed in France arrived in Jackson a few days ago accompanied by his wife. The couple were without money and the story is that they stopped at the home of Judge Boardman and asked if they might sleep in his Garage. Now, a garage even to a healthy person, is not a joyous place to spend the night, and these two were sick. The judge thought it over and knowing something of the work of the Volunteers of America, decided to take the couple to the Volunteer home.

Captain Ross said Tuesday that the ex-service man and his wife were given a comfortable room, good meals and much needed clothing. Their confidence was restored and they started out to find work. The brief rest was a real help, an oasis, like a friendly hand in the dark, and it meant a great deal to two tired and discouraged young people.

The Judge and the Volunteers of America in a way re-enacted the story of the Good Samaritan, and the help given the couple were made possible by the gifts of the people to this institution.—Jackson Daily News.

URGES FARMERS TO CO-OPERATE

Owen D. Young Also Thinks Power Companies Must Study Problems of the Farms.

MANUFACTURERS MUST HELP

Farmers who will open-mindedly co-operate are necessary to bring to pass electricity on the farm, according to the conviction of Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of directors of the General Electric Company.

So are power companies which will study the farmer's problems in an honest attempt to solve those problems electrically. And so are manufacturing concerns which will develop electrical farm machinery, without which the farmer cannot hope to use electric power to advantage.

Mr. Young discussed the obligations of all three of these groups in an address before a joint conference of farmers and power company representatives of New York state. His remarks, summarized, were as follows, speaking first of the farmer:

OWEN D. YOUNG
Chairman Board of Directors, General Electric Co.

"The farmer, above all else, must be interested in his business. He must be open-minded, and hungry to find new methods by which he may make his undertaking both more pleasant and more profitable. Pride in the advancement of his business, and the initiative to advance, are essential.

Farm Owners to Be Leaders

"Leadership must come from the men who own and live on their farms and take pride in their business. I am happy to say that this class yet remains as the great backbone of America. Whether one speaks economically, socially, or politically, they are the anchorage of this country.

"The farmers should insist upon the study of electrification by their agricultural schools and colleges, by their farm organizations, and require a constant and unending publicity of the results of such studies through their farm journals. They should welcome study by the power companies and manufacturing companies and should co-operate with them to work out practical plans to get effective results.

Co-operation Among Farmers Needed

"The farmer is too much of an individualist to be a good co-operator. He must learn to co-operate if he is to get electric service.

"To sum up, I ask the farmer to show the same initiative in the development of his business that the manufacturer does. I ask him to be open-minded as to new methods and to show a readiness to abandon the old.

"I ask him to learn to co-operate with his neighbors for their mutual benefit, as well as to act individually on his own account. I ask him to exert both economic effort and his political influence to create such favorable conditions for the supply of electric service as to insure proper results."

Taking up next what the power companies' attitude and policy should be toward farm electrification, Mr. Young said that the time has come when these utilities should now give special attention and study to agricultural problems and to ways and means of furnishing agricultural service. They should create agricultural departments with men who not only know the electrical business, but who also know the farming business.

"It will not do," said Mr. Young, "for the electric power companies to send men to the farms who do not know on which side of the stanchions, to install a milking machine. One reason why the farmer has not been open-minded is because the people who have been trying to sell him electric service have really known nothing about his needs."

Manufacturers' Job Too

Regarding the electrical manufacturer, Mr. Young had the following to say:

"The manufacturer has not yet met, by sufficient expenditure of energy or money, the problem of the farmer. Without electrical machinery adapted to farm use, the farmer can not extend the use of electricity to his profit."

Mary L. Barnes, daughter of Mr and Mrs. George Barnes of Hanover was united in marriage Saturday, May 30, to Russell Sterling, son of Dr. Sterling of Jerome. The bride and groom left on Sunday for Findlay, Ohio, where they will spend two weeks at the Dr. Sterling farm. The bride was a graduate of the Hanover High school, and has for the past year taught near Hanover. The groom was born at Jerome and attended the Jerome school. Later he went to Jackson.

CALIFORNIA TO GIVE OTHER STATES DATA

Will Supply National Committee With Facts About Its Thirty Thousand Electrified Farms.

Definite activity is in progress in California, the one state where actual farm electrification is further advanced than in any other, to collect data which will be of benefit to other states interested in this subject.

The national Committee on the Relation of Electricity to Agriculture will be the clearing house for the information secured. The arrangement resulted from visits to California by Dr. E. A. White, director of the committee. He informed a gathering of California agricultural and electrical men of the national committee's purpose and assisted in the organization of a California state committee.

In California, thirty thousand farms use electricity. Their consumption of energy in a typical year amounted to 554,000,000 horsepower hours.

Eighty per cent of this energy was employed to operate irrigation pumps. Nearly half of all the electrical energy expended on California farms is derived from electric motors.

At the same time, much use is made of electricity on California farms for typical farming operations. There are also many California farm homes which are completely electrified.

Several sub-committees are gathering general information on the California farms which use electricity. One committee will gather data on costs and kinds of uses of electricity. Another will investigate the question of rates for farms.

The third committee will find out how electricity is used in California farm houses and how it makes life more livable on the farm. The fourth committee will study the economic utilization of electricity on the farm.

Poultry farms and dairy farms will be given special study, as will the farm shop. Refrigeration and the spraying of plants will also be looked into by one of the committees.

It is to be expected that the investigations under way in thirteen other states will find much to aid them in the information obtained from California.

Outdoor Play at Night

Play-time is getting to be synonymous with night time. Great electric floodlights are now used in many sports—tennis, golf, croquet, trap shooting and motorcycle racing, as well as baseball and football. The moonlight, however, is still reported to be the favorite with lovers.

X-RAY FILM BY WIRE SENT IN 7 MINUTES

New Feat of Science Suggests Great Boon to Surgical Patients in Small Communities.

Surgical and medical men see wonderful possibilities in the successful transmission by wire of an X-ray negative, which has just been accomplished between New York and Chicago. The X-ray film, showing in detail the bone structure of a human hand, was sent by wire in just seven minutes, and when developed at the Chicago offices of the Victor X-ray Corporation it was a perfect reproduction of the original.

The great benefit to medical practice which this achievement foreshadows is the possibility of bringing the services of an X-ray specialist to a patient in a far-distant small town or village where such a specialist could not usually be found.

By means of the Coolidge portable X-ray, brought out a few years ago by Dr. W. D. Coolidge, of the General Electric Company's research laboratory, an X-ray picture could be taken at the bedside of the patient. This could then be sent by wire from the nearest sending station to a receiving station in a large city and then shown to an X-ray specialist who could make a diagnosis and wire back instructions for treatment.

Such a great saving of time as this in securing expert advice would undoubtedly prevent many patients from becoming permanent cripples.

Sending stations at convenient points all over the country will be necessary. These, it is predicted, will be established within a few years.

Lights and Pumps Are Greatest Farm Desires

So far as the woman on the farm is concerned, there has always been a glowing possibility of giving life a happier aspect through the coming of electricity. It has been asserted that ninety-six out of every one hundred women on the farms of the nation handle a big wash on Monday. Seventy-nine out of the hundred trim and fill kerosene lamps and thirty-six help with the milking.

That points unmistakably to the duties which the average farm woman would like to see electricity take over first of all. Those duties would be included in an electric lighting system and a small electric pumping outfit. To be rid of the kerosene lamp chore, and never again to "tote water" for dish washing, laundry work or bathing would make anybody's days seem more sunny.

The Necessity Of Obedience To Law

Stratton D. Brooks, the author of the following article, is an educator and citizen of wide experience He is author of a number of valuable school books. As a practical schoolman he has followed the calling from the high school to the presidency of several institutions of learning, including the University of Oklahoma. President Brooks has gained nation wide attention by his clear and convincing reply to a spirited address by Nicholas Murray Butler before the Missouri Society of New York in advocacy of modification of the Volstead Act in the interest of wine and beer.

Liberty is our most precious heritage, and our greatest hope is that we, in our time, may pass on to our children a greater liberty than we ourselves have enjoyed. It may seem strange, therefore, to say that one of the troubles of our country is too much liberty. Yet such, I fear, is the case.

The basic principle of a democracy is equality of rights. No man is entitled to a greater privilege than his neighbor. Whatever freedom of thought or possible action that you and I exercise, must be accorded to all others. Whenever one man demands a right, he must in consistency concede that same right to every other citizen. If he fails to do this, he is attempting to establish an autocracy for himself entirely forgetful of the rights of others. In these times, however, many of us are so loudly insistent on our own personl liberty that we are forgetful of the personal liberty of our neighbors and insist upon things for ourselves that are possible only by curtailing the privileges of other citizens whose claim for personal liberty is equal to our own.

Liberty has limits and those limits are determined by the rights of others. In some cases, these limits are defined by law, but in most cases they may be determined by the general principle that we are never privileged to do that which, if done by everybody, would be detrimental to the general welfare or subversive of the rights of others

I will cite you the case of the tulip bed on the University campus. A pretty girl comes along and picks a tulip. The loss of one makes so little difference that it would not be missed. But if this girl has the privilege of picking a tulip, every other student has equal liberty and it will no longer be possible to maintain the tulip beds or beautify the campus.

It would seem at first thought that any man should be at liberty to keep his own pig in his own back yard. But in crowded districts where the squealing may waken his neighbor's sick baby, or the stench make his home uncomfortable, or the flies bred in the dung heap spread filth and disease to his family, the right of the neighbor for quiet, comfort and health becomes as much of a question of personal liberty as is the right of the other man to live in a pig sty.

The very basis of civilization is the specialization of individuals for particular service. We have farmers, mechanics, teachers, lawyers, merchants, and thousands of other special groups. It is the tendency of this specialization to make us overemphasize our own importance and that of our group and to fail to remember that it is possible to exist only in systematic and harmonious co-operation with thousands of other individuals or groups.

We have seven or eight professors in one department in the University. All of them are specialists no one of whom can do what the others can do. But their department functions through co-operation and harmony between these men. It is so with the land in which we live. Liberty is possible only through absolute co-operation under legal restraints.

Some forms of co-operation have become conventions, but those most essential to the great problem of living in peace and equality with our neighbors have been enacted into law.

These laws are designed to direct all rightminded citizens into lines of action necessary for peaceful and harmonious co-operation. For those who refuse to accept this direction, penalties are prescribed.

Our greatest difficulty today is that under the spurious plea of personal liberty many people who in all other things are good citizens, insist upon substituting their personal ideas for the law. Each of us most certainly has a right to believe what he pleases about the desirability of any laws, but if you or I refuse to obey a law because we believe it interferes with our personal liberty, then every other citizen has an equal right to exercise his judgment as to obeying other laws that he believes to be encroachments upon his liberty of action. The thief may with equal justice say that the law against stealing interferes with his liberty of action and demand freedom from penalty. If such a theory is accepted, the very basis of government and of civilization is destroyed and nothing can save mankind from rapid descent into primitive or barbaric, conditions.

The point of the whole matter is that liberty has it limitations. That we have not the right under the plea of personal liberty to do that which is harmful to others, and that a law designed to curb our harmful actions must be obeyed by those who will obey, and enforced upon those who will not obey. Otherwise, our government is destined to destruction. Nor can there be any other desirable one erected upon its ruins except by the re-establishment in the hearts of men of the necessity of obedience to law.

"America, America,
God mend thine every flaw,
Confirm thy soul in self control
Thy liberty in law."

The will of United States Representative Arthur B. Williams, of Battle Creek, has been filed with Probate Judge Blaine W. Hatch at Marshall, and petition was made to admit it to probate. It was made December 9, 1924, at Battle Creek. Mrs. Sue M. Williams and the Old National Bank of Battle Creek are named executrix and trustee respectively. The estate is valued at $75,000 real and $500,000 personal. There are nine heirs and legatees. It has been often remarked that Mr. Williams' political campaigns were always well financed and now it is very easy to see how it was done. In our opinion Arthur B. Williams was the most liberal candidate with newspaper advertising who ever ran in Michigan.

Dogs Are Becoming 'Landmarks' On Campus

We have heard of people "putting on the dog," but we never understood what they put "it" on. Now it is clear, for "it" in the plural, is on our campus. These visitors were so royally welcomed by the student body, so freely entertained, and, above all, were taught so many tricks that they threaten to become a permanent fixture of the college. Many conveniences have been provided for them, all of which they use. One of the fraternity houses is practically a Dog's Dormitory, the College church provides spiritual enlightment, the dogs have access to all of the buildings should they desire to learn, and the whole campus on which to frolic. Look out anytime and you will be able to see three or four dogs chasing each other or some tease, the latter usually the masculine sex.

Rumor has it that the sheriff has been called into council with the officers of administration. The playful visitors are to be quietly but firmly removed, but how? Is a high wall, like that of a prison to be built for each forbidden guest on sight? Whatever the solution it will become expedient to pledge that he will banished from the grounds. Or is each a student? The dogs are here, and prove distressing to the people who have taken the measures aforementioned. It is sad. But is the campus to be a dog pound? During Quinquennial some of the alumni might be led to believe that a new course had been added to the curriculum—that of the art of dog-catching.—Collegian, Hillsdale.

June A Month Of Pleasure

Lovely June; this month is the most favorite of all the year and seems altogether too short to most of us. It is the time of weddings and high school commencement, of outings and picnics and finds its greatest significance in the two momentous days of July 4th and May 30th (Decoration Day) being halfway between. Nobody this season seems to find as much enjoyment as usual because of the queer weather which we have been having. The conditions have been so different—inasmuch as we generally get a large amount of rain and all kinds of vegetation and grass will spring into being under its vitalizing influence at this time. This season it is fully as dry and dusty in May and June in this section as it ordinarily would be in August and September. Merchants in our berg have been exceedingly annoyed by dust settling in clouds on interior furniture and woodwork and as we read the weather man he don't promise much better conditions for the whole summer, so it is a rather gloomy outlook. It is noticeable also that most kinds of wild flowers are conspicuous by their absence and flower beds not watered artificially were a failure.

In spite of these drawbacks the month of June will be a Godsend to thousands of cooped up city dwellers who stay indoors through the cold period and scarcely get down to the Mother Earth except as they visit public parks. Like the spring birds they come out of their hibernation and take a long look about while breathing the balmy airs.

Heavy rains are reported in the middle west states from the Rocky Mountains to Lake Michigan June 2nd while at Rock Springs Wyoming, there is eight inches of snow reported. This great difference in in temperature is discommoding to say the least. In Philadelphia the mercury registered 97 degrees and several heat prostrations were the result. It is quite remarkable what a difference in climate a few degrees of latitude make in this country!

The Train Control Bogey

A few years ago we heard much about the automatic train control to be efficient when sickness or death paralyzed the hand of the engineer. Inventors at once got busy and soon several devices were on the market for this purpose, some of which got to the trial board. At present only 3500 miles of track in this country is equipped with this system at the enormous cost of $23,000,000 and there is a question among railroad officials as to whether it really is worth what it cost. The results obtained do not warrant any such expenditure of money. Automatic train control was supposed to be a wonderful saver of human life and limb but actual tests show that only 134 lives were saved by it which is so small a percentage of the loss that the devices are almost obsolete. 21,000 lives in one year were lost in grade crossing accidents.

Warren Stone, head of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, says that control devices might cause serious accidents and possibly the worst ever known by a heavy freight train being suddenly stopped and buckling onto a fast train track and wrecking the later. Other opinions are that no automatic apparatus can take the place of the human arm. The Railroad Commission has ordered some 83,000 miles equipped with this device and some railroads have postively refused to consider the installation at all. They will resort to lawsuits rather than under go the terriffic expense. The great New York Central system has seriously considered the installation of such train control.

But not all of its officials will admit the new control is a success. If it is such success has not yet been fully proved. The automatic stoker came out some time ago and was hailed as an innovation, but its use is not likely to be universal as it does not always operate. Engines equipped with the stoker quite often go bunk on the road and have to be stoked by hand.

Mrs. Ernest Clark of Jonesville received word Saturday of the death at South Bend, Indiana, of an aunt, Mrs. Louize Salzmann. The deceased lived for many years at North Adams. Mrs. Salzmann (formerly Louise Beiter) died at her home in South Bend Saturday May 30th and was buried in the North Adams cemetery Tuesday, June 2nd. Relatives from away to attend services at the grave were Mrs. Nettie Kotz of South Bend; Henry Beiger of Mishawaka, Indiana, Mrs. Mina Gempel, Mrs. Anna Crone, Mrs. Nora Sprauel and Lewis Beiter of Toledo.

Indian's Use of Tobacco

The first mention of smoking tobacco in Canada is to be found in Jacques Cartier's account of his second voyage, made in 1535. The earliest white visitors to North America found the habit of smoking tobacco established among most of the Indian tribes. As a rule, the tobacco was smoked in pipes. A tribe of Indians occupying the district about the foot of Lake Erie were known as the Tobacco Indians. They grew tobacco and exchanged it with their neighbors for fish, corn and furs.

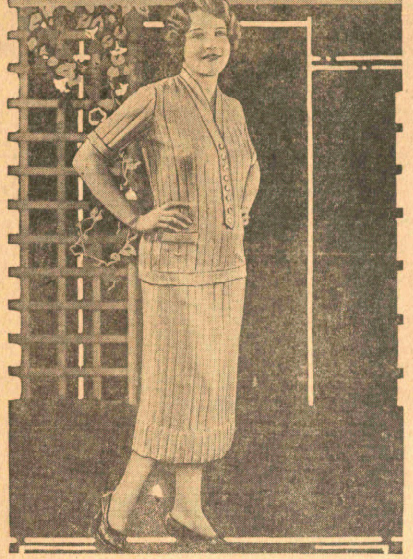
Adorning the Knitted Frock; Lovely Gowns for Matrons

CROSS the palm of the itinerant fortune-teller with a piece of silver, and lo! our past, present and future will be revealed. Knitted outerwear fashions are like that this season—responsive to the magic touch of silver. The stylist trims our sweaters and knitted two-piece suits with silver buttons and gilded trappings and behold! a revelation of entrancing modes. To the woman of smart fashion, silver and gold trimmings, as applied to things knitted, present a most interesting innovation.

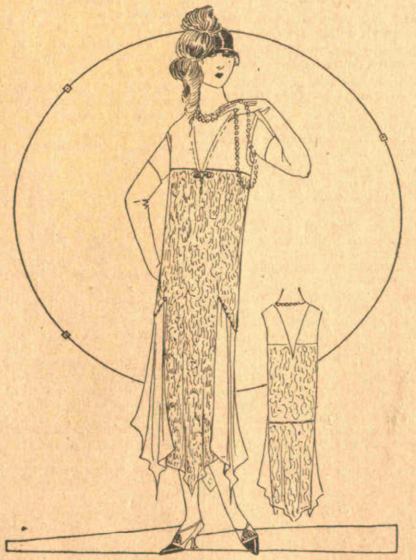


Exquisite Sports Frock.

All sorts of intriguing ideas are expressed with gilded leather as a medium for motifs, bandings, collars, cuffs and belts on the latest knitwear modes. Illustrative of this new style trend is the exquisite sports frock here pictured. It is knitted of mist-blue rayon, its drop-stitch contributing a note of interest. There is a bordering of silver with bright gilded buttons. Surely a sports costume which will make appeal to every queen of fashion!

Added to its comfort-giving qualities, is the beauty of the coloring expressed in knitted rayon or fiber silk as you may choose to call it. The new knitted rayon suits, which are the last word in fashion, abound in lovely flower shades, such as rose, cyclamen, flax.

Then too, the prediction that lacy stitch will feature throughout summer knitted outerwear fashions becomes realization in the latest rayon-knit jumper suits. It also adds to the prestige of the newer knitted frocks, that they are two-piece, for without a doubt the skirt with overblouse leads in point of style importance. The blouse may be long-sleeved and high-necked, or a matching scarf, for all these points of fashion are emphasized in the newer knitted modes.



Fine Example of the French Art.

It is said Paris couturiers have a penchant for designing apparel for matrons, at any rate the numbers of hats, wraps and gowns they present, created to suit matrons (both young and older) seem to indicate a preference that way. But, of course, one must consider that the main demands on them come from matrons and it is most important to please them. Whatever the reasons, the modes of the French reach their climax in apparel for women who have left girlhood behind them. One reason is that nothing is too subtle, too sophisticated or too splendid to help in contributing to the charm of women who have attained poise.

A fine example of French art in matrons' gowns appears in the sketch shown above. It has been created with special reference to June weddings, as suitable for the matron of honor, among the bride's attendants, or to the mother of the bride or groom. It is of lace and georgette and very adaptable—suited to young and to older matrons. It has several marks of the present season to distinguish it and is a beautiful exponent of current modes, notably in the uneven hemline, the combination of lace and georgette, the jabot-panels at each side of the skirt joined to the georgette with a beading of small beads. A deep yoke in the bodice has a "V" shaped neck opening and the sleeves are very short. Laces dyed to match are used with georgette in frocks of this kind, and blond lace is used with contrasting colors. The hat is depended upon to suit these soft and elegant afternoon gowns to the years of the wearer. Younger women wear the wide-brimmed models, often with flower trimming, but the older matrons select smart, small shapes. The hat pictured is of hair braid with handsome monture of ostrich feathers at one side which adds greatly to its beauty.

Jabots Grace Simple Frocks

The simplest frock of black satin or chiffon gains in allure if it is softened by the addition of a frilled or plaited jabot of sheer net or fine laces. These may be bought ready made and are quickly attached with a few stitches.

Red Hat Popular

This is a season of bright-colored millinery, and the red hat is at the height of its popularity. Shades of rose and purple are also liked.

Wide Silks Practical

The new plain and printed silks, which come in a width of 54 inches, are as practical and economical as they are smart. A yard and a half of the material is all that is necessary for a frock, while little more is required for a coat.

White Jabots Used

Iceland Must Live on Country's Products

Fashionable Icelandic women have had few new dress models from Paris this year, and the modish young men will not be able to import any of the flapping Oxford trousers, so much commented on in England. This is because for two years Iceland is not to bring in any ready-made clothing. Shoes and all sorts of fabrics are also on the prohibited list, says a correspondent of the New York World.

Virtually all luxuries and many necessary articles have been placed on the prohibited list in an effort to stabilize the Icelandic crown. Bread, butter, margarine, cheese, salt meat, pork sausage, eggs, fruit, leather goods, soap, furniture, films, watches, clocks, motor cycles, automobiles and scores of other articles may not be brought into the country.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.

An Illustrator

The late Guernsey Moore, the artist, disliked illustrations that did not accurately follow the text they were supposed to illustrate.

"I was talking to a famous illusthator the other day," Mr. Moore said in Germantown, "and I asked him this question:

"Penn, what is the most interesting story you ever illustrated?"

"'Dunno,' said Penn. 'Never read any of 'em.'"

The Michigan Public Schools

Are now one of our hobbies. For years the legislature of the state has cudgeled its brains to provide funds to erect buildings, buy apparatus and equip our state educational institutions that we may truthfully say "Michigan's school system stands at the head." The late President Burton of the U. of M. durlng his short administration saw to it that Ann Arbor's great seat of learning was enriched by the finest buildings possible to erect. All of these things cost you and I and all of us who pay taxes, a neat sum, but we are not kicking. Let the good work go on and make us the peers of educational work of ths Union.

At present the personnel of Ann Arbor students embraces representatives of Japan, India, China and most of the other Eastern nations. They have come here not because the U. of M. is the largest university, but because in point of clean, moral, lucid instruction, it is de luxe. When these denizens of the Eastern world go home to China, quaint Japan, squalid India and the Isles of the Sea, let it not be said that they shall blush for our morals as a prohibitive nation.

This year's course is scheduled for July 7th to 31st, and besides the faculty, the following distinguished men will lecture: Rev. William P. White San Francisco; Rev. Our Thirtieth Year

THIS issue of the Advocate begins the Thirtieth Year of our existence as a purveyor of news to the village of North Adams and the surrounding country.

During the twenty-nine years of the Advocate's existence there have been some shadows as well as some high lights. Mr. Frank Boyd, former owner of this plant, used to say that he believed there was just one trade which was more disagreeable than newspaper work, and that was the undertaking business, but it seems to us there are several. We say frankly, we enjoy it, but there are lots of difficulties. During the life of our paper, it has moved twice, burned completely once, and been replaced. So much for its history,

Advertising patronage has been only medium but the printing department has been very busy, and we find as time progresses, it continues to increase. Of course it is well understood, perhaps that in small plants there is a constant interference between the two, yet by hard conscientious work this must be eliminated. We have been obliged, in spite of fatigue, to put in long hours and sleepless nights, for the past two years, and such is expected. We lost considerable money on February 8th, 1923, but we're not complaining. As to criticisms on the management of this paper—we get them, but its little we care about such foolcraft. If we should consent to lay down our temperance principles or our anti-jingo attitude because of dollars, (as some do) then it would be time to criticise. We thank, you one and all.

ELECTRICITY ON THE FARM

Ten years ago it was prophesied by the wisacres that electricity would rule the world and while its progress has not been as rapid as predicted, yet there are indications that such will come to pass ere another generation rolls around. At present only one farm in twelve is equipped to use the current in Michigan, but at the rate the lines are being extended through the country-side, soon every farm home will be on the line. In Michigan are 196,447 farms, 8 per cent of which use electricity in some form.

The principal question now is why does electricity cost so much? The answer is plain; most of it is the product of the steam plant, hence the high cost of manufacture Coal is expensive and its efficiency not fully developed. In sections where water power furnishes the necessary current, the cost is much lighter. We have in mind the electric system of Marshall, Michigan, generated entirely by turbines run by a dam on the Kalamazoo river. Electricity should be considerably cheaper in Marshall than in North Adams. On the best farms in this section of Hillsdale County will be found the private plant, but these have their drawbacks, it is true. One of the worst features of the private plant is probably its short-lived batteries and no expert help on the farm to repair its complicated machinery. The overhead also mounts up on these plants. Southern Michigan is soon going to be honeycombed with these lines and every farm will be in the circuit, so that the individual plant will not be as cheap or as practical.

The Baccalaureate Address

On Sunday evening at the Congregational church Rev. Virgil Hunt delivered to the large Senior class of fourteen members the baccalaureate sermon. The class marched in and took their places in the front seats and Supt. Young and T. N. Lamb took their places on each side of Rev. Hunt. Mr. Lamb read the Scripture and Supt. Young offered a touching prayer. Howard Haskell rendered a violin solo, Jean Young sang a solo and Mrs. Hunt also rendered a solo.

Rev. Hunt called attention to the fact that he had singled out at least two young men in the class whom he believed were natural leaders of men, and who could not fail to make their mark in the world. He also said there was an exceedingly bright future for every member. He stressed the value of self help in educational matters, and urged the importance of higher ideal and education. He said the raw material was becoming scarcer and scarcer, and he asked the pointed question: "Have you recently seen a totally uneducated man?" The question answers itself. In this part of the country such cases are exceedingly rare and as to knowing your particular bent—"there is no wrong cue" he said. "You'll kuow if you are called for any particular line or profession." He said the Class of 1925 were only four years behind himself on the great ladder of progressive schools. It is seldom that a graduating class is composed of an equal number of boys and girls. The meeting closed by the congregation joining in singing "America."

Annual Commencement

The 1925 Commencement exercises occurred on Thursday evening at Community Hall in North Adams and the 14 young people that constitute the class marched in to music of L'Amoreaux Orchestra of Hillsdale and took their places on the rostrum of the hall which was prettily decorated for the occasion. The remarkable incident of this season is there are an equal number of boys aud girls. Invocation was pronounced by Rev. Virgil Hunt of the Congregational church.

Frances W. Young, salutatorian of the Class gave a well rendered discourse on character; the orchestra played a selection after which the Valedictorian Theron G. Randolph gave his oration, "Climb, Though the Rocks be Rugged" which also was the class motto. Mr. Randolph exhorted his classmates to higher things in life and called their attention to the fact that only by laborious study can the young person hope to attain the goal.

The address of the evening was delivered by President D. B. Waldo of Kalamazoo Normal College one of the most meritorious men in the country in Normal work. The address was listened to with interest by the crowded audience. The class song was rendered and Superintendent R. C. Young feelingly presented the diplomas to the class which he had trained and in whom his best wishes are vested. Rev. Virgil Hunt pronounced the benediction and the finale rendered by the orchestra brought to a close the school year of 1925 with graduates to receive their sheepskins as follows: Naomi E. Crapser, Ralph C. Wolcott Charlotte M. Lane, Clarence Hoffman. Everett A. Westcott, Ethel Louise Bohn, Paul N. Wells, Myrtle O. Rogers, M. Bernard Shaw, Thelma Davis Brooks, J. W. Lynch Frances W Young, Theron G. Randolph, Genevieve J. Roberts.

She can't Eat Grass Enough

A cow producing 35 lbs. of milk daily cannot maintain that yield unless she has about 30 lbs. of dry matter in her feed.

Fresh pasture, which is nearly 80% water, contains but a small percentage of dry matter. This means that the cow will have to eat at least 175 lbs. of grass per day if she is to maintain both condition and milk yield.

Will your cows be able to find and crop that amount of pasture every day this summer? That is what you are expecting of them if you rely on grass alone. The result? A loss of milk and money, because few cows can eat more than 90 lbs. of grass in one day.

The remedy is simple. Feed Larro with pasture through the season—at the ratio of 1 lb. of Larro for each 5 lbs. of milk when pasture is plentiful, with a gradual increase as summer advances. Thus you can prevent the summer slump in milk; bring your cows into the fall in better condition for their winter work; and make more profit for yourself.

Winterproof Roofs

It takes a roof of real quality to live through many winters of the sort enjoyed along our northern border. From December to March these roofs are subjected to high winds, snow, sleet, hail, with an occasional thaw to make matters worse.

It is for this reason that so many homes in this section are covered with Ruberoid Shingles and Roofing. The illustrations above—taken from actual photographs—especially the close-up of the dormer, show what these roofs have to put up with. Yet Ruberoid Shingles and Roofing thrive under just such punishment.

On many a building there are Ruberoid Roofs, 20, 25, and 30 years old with the limit of their endurance still to be determined. They have withstood the wear and tear of the elements in all parts of the world—in the Tropics and beyond the Arctic Circle.

Among the Ruberoid Products there is one which will fully meet your requirements, whether it be for a twenty-room residence or a three-room bungalow, a schoolhouse or a factory, a church or a theatre.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Shanghai Riots Start Anti-Foreign Movement That Spreads Over China.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CHINA is again the cause of acute worry for the foreign powers that interest themselves particularly in that vast and distracted country. The trouble this time is located at Shanghai, and as is so often the case these days, it is laid at the doors of Bolshevik agitators. Starting with a riotous demonstration by Chinese students, it has brought about the landing of armed forces from the warships of several foreign nations. This has resulted in a great outburst of anti-foreign sentiment in all the large cities and it is not beyond the bounds of possibility that some of the scenes of the Boxer war may be repeated.

The Shanghai students were demonstrating against the sentencing of some of their comrades for their part in a strike in Japanese-owned cotton mills and came into conflict with the British Sikh police, who guard the international settlement. The police arrested the leaders of the parade and the crowd stormed the police station. Thereupon the Sikhs opened fire, killing ten students and wounding many others. This gave the rioting a fine start and there was continual fighting for several days in which the local defense organizations of the international settlement took part. American, British and Italian blue jackets were landed at both Shanghai and Canton, and Consul General Cunningham asked that more war vessels be sent.

Native Red agitators were active in the cities, stirring up the coolies, and they induced thousands of workers to strike. In Shanghai the foreigners looked after the food supplies and the necessary industries, such as telephone, light and power. All banks and shops were closed. While the students there quieted down, those in Peking formed a huge anti-foreign parade and marched to the residence of Tuan Chi-jui, provisional president, where they demanded the resignation of the minister of education. They went next to the foreign office and presented eight demands, including the revocation of treaties, the abolition of extra-territoriality and the punishment of the Sikh police. The government already had protested to the diplomatic corps against the action of the Sikhs and sent two commissioners to Shanghai to investigate the affair. Correspondents thought it was seeking to unite all political factions against the foreigners. They said it was probable Chang Tso-lin, the Manchurian war lord, would now recognize the government, considering the present cabinet incapable of handling the situation. It was believed Liang Shi-yi would be made premier and Dr. C. T. Wang foreign minister.

While the whole affair may blow over, there is the danger that when the news of it reaches the interior there may be a wholesale massacre of foreigners who are beyond the reach of immediate protection.

LIQUOR smugglers of the Atlantic coast are resorting to desperate measures since the rum row off New York was dispersed by the coast guard. They have given out the announcement that they will have a large number of very speedy power boats and that these will be armored and equipped with machine guns. This probably is largely bluff, designed to frighten the coast guardsmen into quitting the service, and it is said a good many of the force is resigning or declining to re-enlist. Meanwhile a new rum row of fully a score of vessels has formed 22 miles off Boston harbor and Cape Ann, and Commander Uberroth, division chief of the coast guard, has called on Washington to send him reinforcements.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrews, reading with satisfaction Admiral Billard's report on what has been accomplished to date, said the coast guard had not yet really begun to fight and that as yet there had been only "a preliminary skirmish to uncover the strength and resources of the enemy."

Dry forces in the Illinois legislature scored a double victory over the wets. They defeated a bill to repeal the state prohibition law, with provision for a referendum, and then advanced a bill to create a state prohibition bureau in the attorney general's office.

WITH the expiration of the two weeks specified by Captain Amundsen before he started on his attempt to fly to the North pole, the Norwegian government put into operation its plans for relief expeditions. It was announced that an official party in two hydroairplanes would patrol the districts north and east of Spitzbergen; that a French party headed by M. Charcot, a noted explorer, would search the east Greenland area, and that the Norwegian Aero club also might send out an expedition. The three expeditions were to co-operate.

A tragic incident of the polar adventure is the death in Florence, Italy, of James W. Ellsworth, the wealthy American capitalist and art collector, whose son Lincoln went with Amundsen. The elder Ellsworth financed the North pole expedition. It was thought his death was hastened by anxiety over his son's fate.

AMONG the decisions handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States last week were two of vast importance to business. In reversing decrees of lower courts directed against the Maple Flooring Manufacturing association and the Cement Manufacturers' association, the court held that the gathering and dissemination of information by trade associations on costs, prices, production and stocks do not necessarily constitute a restraint of trade in violation of the anti-trust laws. This, as was pointed out by Justice Stone who wrote the decision, is provided the associations do not reach or attempt to reach any agreement or concerted action with respect to prices or production or restraining competition. Chief Justice Taft and Associate Justices McReynolds and Sanford dissented, believing these specific cases "disclose carefully developed plans to cut down normal competition." Criminal indictments against members of the flooring association, voted two years ago in Grand Rapids, Mich., are still pending. About six hundred trade associations are affected by the Supreme court's ruling.

IN ANOTHER decision the Supreme court declared unconstitutional the Oregon law prescribing that children between the ages of eight and sixteen years must be educated in the public schools. The fight against the law was made by a Catholic educational institution and a military academy. The decision of the court was unanimous and said in part:

"The child is not the mere creature of the state. Those who nurture him and direct his destiny have the right coupled with the high duty to recognize and prepare him for additional obligations. We think it is entirely plain that the Oregon act of 1922 unreasonably interferes with the liberty of parents and guardians to direct the upbringing and education of children under their control.

"As often heretofore pointed out, rights guaranteed by the Constitution may not be abridged by legislation which has no reasonable relation to some purpose within the competency of the state. The fundamental theory of liberty on which all governments in this Union repose excludes any general power of the state to standardize its children by forcing them to accept instruction from public teachers only."

OF GREAT interest to the financial world, and so indirectly to everyone, is the plan announced for the reorganization of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, which has been in the hands of receivers since March 18. The plan, which has been approved by the several protective committees representing the holders of the bonds and stocks of the company, provides for an exchange of more than $464,000,000 in securities, makes possible the liquidation or funding of all the short term debt of the road including government loans and involves an assessment of $28 a share on the preferred stock and $32 a share on the common stock. The reorganization will not disturb the general mortgage bonds of the railway company, the divisional mortgages, the equipment trusts; or the guaranteed issues, namely those of the Chicago, Terre Haute & Southeastern Railway company (operated under lease) and of the Chicago, Milwaukee & Gary Railway company.

According to one expert, the program "will enable prompt reconstruction of the property, relieve the road of pressing obligations and prevent a prolonged receivership, with the consequences of controversies and loss of business because of inadequate resources and constructive policies. But the plan will not greatly alter the capital structure and it does not bring the prospect of dividends any nearer to the stockholders. In this respect, the reorganization managers appear to be willing to let the future decide."

THOSE who have been seeking to use the President for advertising purposes, and they are many, received a setback last week when Mr. Coolidge declined to be starred in a film that is being made with the co-operation of the navy authorities. It was planned that the President should be photographed in the act of handing a diploma of the Naval academy to a movie actor, but as has been said he refused. However, he was present at the graduating exercises at Annapolis and made an address to the class of 1925. He made a strong plea and argument for national defense and preparedness, asking that every citizen be a potential soldier to back up a comparatively small army and navy. At the same time he denounced jingoism and declared there was no justification at this time for assertions that other specified powers are arming against us, thus arousing national suspicion and hatred.

GERMANY has received the note from the allies specifying the instances in which she has failed to comply with the disarmament clauses of the treaty of Versailles, as a result of which the allies declined to evacuate the Cologne bridgehead. She was not pleased with the note, of course, but it was said the government's reply would contain a promise to keep all its pledges. France also answered Germany's proposals for a security pact, her note being conciliatory but firm in the matter of protection for her allies on the eastern German frontier.

PROGRESS toward the funding of the Italian debt to America is reported to be quite satisfactory, though no details of the suggested terms have been made public. It was announced that J. P. Morgan & Co. have extended a loan of $50,000,000 to Italy to stabilize the lire. This is a step of great importance and had its effect on all bourses. Finance Minister de Stefani told the Italian chamber that the national budget was safely balanced, despite heavy appropriations for the army and for public works.

THE crisis in the war against the Riffians has not yet been reached, and both sides seemingly put in the week preparing for more decisive operations. Abd-el-Krim, it was said, was planning to concentrate all his effectives against the French, withdrawing from the Spanish zone. Both the French and Spanish are using bombing planes with telling effect.

SELDOM has there been such general and spontaneous mourning over a man's death as in the case of Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana, vice president of the United States during Mr. Wilson's two administrations. He passed away during a visit in Washington, and was buried at Indianapolis. The President and innumerable other government officials and members of the diplomatic corps attended the services in the national capital. Aside from his admitted ability, Mr. Marshall was notable for the genuine affection in which he was held by all who knew him. His keen sense of humor, his sparkling wit and manner of plain speaking, his kindly philosophy and his fidelity to his friends made him for years one of the most interesting figures in American public life. Always he held to his simple Christian faith.

SECRETARY OF WAR WEEKS underwent an operation in a Boston hospital recently, and since then his condition has caused a great deal of anxiety. The physicians admit it is not satisfactory, though they declare there is no immediate cause for alarm.

Divorces Man Lacking Interest in Psychology

Los Angeles.—Robert M. Flynn was not strong at "psychology and advanced thought," but he enjoyed a good scrap, according to his wife, Martha Flynn, who obtained a divorce from him on cruelty charges after a hearing before Judge Summerfield.

"Judge, I am a woman of intense mental activity, a professor of psychology and a student of advanced thought," Mrs. Flynn enlightened the court. "I can converse intelligently and fluently upon these and a host of other topics, and I enjoy doing so.

"To my remarks he would return only a tolerant smile, listening to me quietly and puffing away at a pipe.

"The only mental animation on his part that I can recall resulted from an episode that I remember with the deepest humiliation. My husband's sister, a woman, I may state, of small enlightenment, lost her temper with me over some trifle and proceeded to attack me.

"Mr. Flynn sat there in his chair and guffawed and applauded, but not raising a hand in my defense."

Monroe—At a meeting of the city commission recently, Harold C. Nadeau, tendered his resignation as city attorney, claiming work interferes with his private practice. Nadeau has held the position since the first of the year.

Lansing—Charging that Clinton county officers had failed to keep an agreement to close dance halls in their county on Sundays, Sheriff Hugh Sibley announced that he would lift the ban on Sunday dancing in Ingham county.

Owosso—The Ann Arbor railroad has been sold to the Wabash railroad, according to an official announcement made here by J. E. Tussig, of St. Louis, president of the Wabash The sale, he said, is subject to the approval of the interstate commerce commission.

Battle Creek—A temporary injunction restraining Charles Meade, reported to be a former drain commissioner, and others, under $10,000 penalty, from tampering with or in any way attempting to lower the level of Goguac lake has been issued by Circuit Judge Walter H. North.

Battle Creek—Urbandale, the suburb founded by the late Senator James Henry, has become so large that the erection of a high school building to supplement a fine grade school is contemplated. By fall over 500 children will have to be cared for and the plan now awaiting official approval is to add a tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades to the suburb's school system.

White Cloud—On the eve of a contemplated visit of the jury, in the retrial of Mrs. Alice Dudgeon and her son, Lee, to the alleged scene of the murder of Mrs. Dudgeon's son-in-law, Romie Hodell, the abandoned homestead burned last week. A mass of ashes was all that was left of the dilapidated building in which western Michigan's most sensational crime is alleged to have been committed.

Monroe—With assurances received that the state intends to straighten out trunk line 65 from the village of Ida, and construct an extension from this road in Monroe county, county road commissioners of Monroe adopted a resolution concurring in the determination of the state highway department, deputy commissioner and chief engineer. A copy of the resolution was forwarded to the state highway department.

Detroit—Ross Schram has been ousted as general manager of the Detroit Street Railways by the Street Railway Commission, which immediately appointed H. U. Wallace of Knoxville, Tenn., as Schram's successor. Wallace, who has been assistant general manager and active head of the Knoxville Light & Power company, since January, 1924, has had 30 years' experience in railroading and engineering.

Detroit—Michigan state troopers are to occupy Young's club, on Clinton River Point, Macomb county, as a barracks. The place was padlocked recently for violation of the prohibition law, and this was probably the reason why the owners were willing to rent it to the state police for $30 a month. Allan Straight, commissioner of public safety, petitioned Judge Charles C. Simons to take off the padlock and allow his department to use the place. The judge consented.

Lansing—As part of the projected development in Detroit, on which nearly $10,000,000 additional will be spent from May 1 to October 31, this year, the Detroit Edison company has asked the Michigan public utilities commission for authority to issue $8,000,000 bonds. The program planned for these five months contemplates the expenditure of $1,445,600 on new business in immediate vicinity and practically all of the remainder in improving its present facilities to care for new business.

Lansing—John Baird, director of the State Department of Conservation, has ordered game wardens at Reed City to arrest Frank Collins, a wealthy land owner the next time they find Collins fishing the trout stream that traverses his own property. Collins faces arrest under a statute which prohibits fishing in publicly planted streams unless such streams are open to the public. The law was enacted because property owners after receiving trout fry for planting in public waters were constantly posting those waters and so turning the state-hatched fry to their own exclusive use.

Grand Rapids—The first attempt by Betty Billings, 14-year-old daughter of Robert E. Billings, to drive an automobile, ended tragically when William Davies, 15 years old, son of Owen P. Davies, a real estate dealer, one of her instructors, was killed and her three companions and herself were injured. When she lost control of the car, the rear wheel slid from the road near Cascade, eight miles east of Grand Rapids, and before Miss Billings could bring the automobile back to the highway, it rolled over.

Ypsilanti—Three students were treated in the Meyer Memorial Hospital here as the result of a riot between pupils of the Michigan State Normal College and the University of Michigan. It capped mutual ill will of several weeks' standing between students of the two schools and was the most rousing free-for-all fight ever staged in this town. The fight lasted more than half an hour. More than 300 students engaged in it with fists, clubs, paddles and bricks. The Ypsilanti police were utterly incapable of doing a thing.

Grand Rapids—J. R. Bury of Ann Arbor is the new president of the Michigan State Association of Letter Carriers, which has completed its annual convention here. Winn Powers, Jackson, was named president of the Michigan Federation of Post Office Clerks, whose meeting was held with that of the letter carirers.

Mt. Clemens—Lake St. Clair has yielded up the body of Wilburt Follick, Detroit, who was drowned November 16 last off Huron Ponit. Louis Stier, also of Detroit, was with Follick at the time. They went out in a duck boat for a day's shooting against the advice of experienced hunters, as the day was stormy with a big sea.

Detroit—The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Co. will open its new tourist and commercial line between Detroit and Chicago, via Mackinac Island and St. Ignace, on June 25, A. A. Schantz, president and general manager announced. The steamers Eastern States and Western States, recently remodelled, have been designated for this run.

Iron Mountain—A beauty queen from every county in the upper peninsula and two counties in northern Wisconsin are to be named at the Dickinson county fair in September. The sum of $400 has been set aside for the feature. From the group the queen of all the counties will be picked. The reward will be a trip to Atlantic City or Miami, Fla.

Lansing—The number of bus lines operating under the jurisdiction of Michigan railway companies is expected to increase greatly during the coming year, in spite of the fact that the Karcher Bill, which would have permitted steam and electric railway companies to institute interurban bus service without recourse to the Public Utilities Commission, has been vetoed.

Sturgis—An old stage coach barn, built over 80 years ago and the oldest relic of pioneer days to be found in Sturgis, is being dismantled and the lumber will be used in erecting a barn on a farm near this city. Back in the early 80s the barn, and a tavern, which joined it on the front were overnight stopping places for the stage line that operated over the Chicago road west from Detroit.

Lansing—The stork made a better record in Michigan during 1924 than in 1923, figures obtained from Washington show. In 25 states which the government selected to investigate, only 16 showed an increase. In Michigan the birthrate per 1,000 population increased from 23.4 in 1923 to 24.1 in 1924. The infant mortality rate decreased from 80.3 deaths in 1,000 births in '23 to 72.2 in '24.

Detroit—Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck, Charles Beecher Warren, former United States ambassador to Japan and Mexico, Frank L. Mulholland, former president of the International Rotary Clubs and scores of other University of Michigan alumni of national and international fame will be among the guests at the three-day convention of the National Association of University of Michigan Clubs, to be opened in Detroit, June 10.

Detroit—Six men in a big touring car crowded Henry Gattner, president of the Michigan Refining Co., driving a smaller car to the curb, and took from him a bag containing $3,000 in cash and the same amount in checks. He was on his way to the bank. With Gattner was Clarence Lehr, an attorney. One of the bandits stepped into the car in which Gattner and Lehr had been, and drove it away after his companions.

Wayland—Clarence Marsh, 18 years old, died in the Allegan hospital after being nearly roasted to death under a pile of hot coal cinders. With a small group of laborers the youth was engaged in the unloading of cinders of a steel gondola car which had just arrived from the Pennsylvania railroad company's roundhouse at Grand Rapids When the dumping apparatus failed to function the boy clambered inside to force the cinders through the opening.

Cadillac—When the fire department was making the run to the home of P. A Wolfe, recently, an amusing delay occurred. A citizen stood on the porch of his home and waved his arm as the fire trucks neared the location of the box that had been pulled. The firemen supposed the man was directing them to the scene of the blaze and stopped, only to have the semaphoric gentleman blandly inquire "Where's the fire?"

Lansing—May is the month for measles, according to reports from the Michigan Department of Health. Of the 5,345 cases reported up to the present time this year, 2,215 have occurred during the first 28 days of May, or nearly 41 per cent of the total. The spring months appear to be most favorable for outbreaks of measles. The close of school for the summer vacation is significant in the decrease of this disease each year, as well as other communicable diseases.

Ann Arbor—Unexplored regions north and west of Greenland will be the goal of Dr Walter N. Koelz, of the bureau of fisheries, who has just received word that he has been chosen as ichthyologist on the National Geographic Society navy expedition this summer which will be led by Capt. Donald MacMillan, Arctic explorer. Dr. Koelz, who received his PhD from the University in 1917, has been scientific investigator for the United States Bureau of Fisheries at the zoological department since that time.

Muskegon—Pigeon Hill, most prominent of sand dunes along the west shore line, is to be chopped into if plans announced by Robert Ferguson, land owner, officials of the Pere Marquette railroad and Nugent Sand company, materialize. According to the announcement, more than a quarter of the hill will be leveled and fitted for a residential district. All dunes between the hill and the government channel connecting Muskegon lake and Lake Michigan will be levelled and prepared for a building program, it was said.

How Radio Helps American Farmer

How the radio is helping the farmer and his family to farm better, live better and sell better is being impressed every day upon Samuel R. Guard, Director of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, in letters he receives from farm listeners-in on WLS, the Sears-Roebuck station, Chicago. How WLS, which has become known as the "voice of the farm," is reaching most isolated points is indicated from a message from Kirley, South Dakota, from a farmer 50 miles from the railroad and 15 miles from a telephone. He tells of the aid the market and weather reports have given him in his farm work. Another farmer of Bureau county, Illinois, tells how WLS service enabled him at the last minute to save $75 on a single shipment of hogs.

From far and wide come communications to Mr. Guard of the commercial benefit of the Foundation's station reports and educational talks by agricultural experts. The farm service of WLS starts at 9 o'clock in the morning and is continued throughout the day until 6 p. m. The earliest and very latest information on live stock, crops and weather conditions are broadcast to rural America, and at night, when the farmer is at his fireside, he listens to educational talks on every phase of farming by men who are in a position to give him the information and advice which enable him to help himself.

The practical value of radio to the American farmer cannot be overestimated," said Mr. Guard. "Not only does WLS, the farm station of America, assist the farmer in a practical way, but it helps the farmer's wife and the farmer's children in their Boys' and Girls' club work. The Homemakers' Hour, a daily feature of the station, gives the farm woman just what she wants to know and furnishes entertainment for the entire family."

Now Sadder But Wiser

A few months ago, we are told, a well dressed man walked into a New York jewelry store and bought a beautiful pearl paying for it $5,000 in real money. A few days later this same man came back. "My wife is in ecstasies over that pearl," he told the merchant. "She wants another just like it."

"How badly does she want it?" asked the jeweler. "Pearls of that grade are very rare, hard to find and, for purposes of matching, very expensive."

After talking over the price and the quality of the pearl the customer finally agreed to pay the jeweler $17,500 if he would match the one he had already bought.

A few days later a stranger with a pearl which, as nearly as the jeweler could remember, matched the one he had first sold, drifted into the store. The stranger was not anxious to sell his pearl but when the jeweler offered him $15,000 for it he could not resist. With visions of his $2,500 profit, the jeweler handed over the money for the pearl, which he locked away in his safe.

He promptly notified his customer of his find, but the latter was strangely unresponsive; indeed he seemed to have removed from the address he had given the jeweler.

Gradually the jeweler began to see a great light; he had bought back the original pearl and given the well dressed customer a $10,000 profit on the transaction—fallen a victim to a swindle several hundred years old. Yes, it happened in New York, where they are supposed to know it all.

School courses by radio are winning many disciples here, but none more enthusiastic than Fay Stevens of North Adams, who has enrolled in the National RadioFarm School which is broadcast from six stations including WWJ, Detroit, throughout the country. Promptly at 1 p. m. each day the school bell calls its widely scattered scholars to their ten-minute lesson. C. M. Long, Chief of Farm Service of the Blue Valley Creamery Institute, is registrar of the school, and the faculty embraces the greatest array of agricultural experts brought together for any purpose. Hogs is the subject on Mondays, poultry on Tuesdays, dairying Wednesdays, legumes Thursdays, and each Friday is converted into a question box period for the students' farm problems.

A summer conference for ministers and social workers, for the discussion of various community problems, will be held at the M. S. C. from July 20 to 31, during the closing days of the annual summer school at M. S. C. A score of prominent lecturers and rural life leaders, including many from outside the state, have already been booked to appear on the conference program. Dr. Kenyon L. Butterfield, president of the M. S. C., and also of the American Country Association; Prof. E. H. Ryder, director of the summer school at M. S. C.; Dr. Eben Mumford, head of the college sociology department and E. E. Gallup, state supervisor of agricultural education, are prominent local men who are planning the conference.

In Memory of Captain Moses Allen

One hundred years ago Hillsdale county was an unknown, uncharted section of wild land somewhere in the territory of Detroit or Monroe where the red deer and the red der Indian wandered aimlessly from lake to lake and from grove to grove in search of his favorite fish or game, but never remaining at any particular spot long enough to establish himself. Both of these villages had already gained a foothold on the edges of the great unexplored wilderness stretching to the Pacific ocean.

Down the old Indian trail from the east one sunshiny summer came Captain Moses Allen and his family. Dimly through the mist of years we can imagine their great lumbering, covered wagon plunging and rocking over stones and stumps as they forced their way across flowing streams and through magnificant hard wood forests out into open prairie lands which the Indians called Mscoota Siac. Here after great hardships they found a fair land free from timber though interspersed with magnificent oak, hickory, whitewood and elm groves and watered by numerous streams many of which have since disappeared under the demoralizing influence of civilization. It looked good to the experienced eye of Captain Allen and he decided to anchor; he at once went about felling trees to erect his sizable log cabin.

Stories were often told by the family of these early days and how the open doors and windows had to be draped with blankets to turn the wolves, wildcats and other less formidable beasts.

Captain Allen was in Canada at the breaking out of the war of 1812 so that with many other loyal Americans he fell a victim to the British recruiting squad, which drafted him into the hated Tory army, but he deserted at first opportunity to enlist with his countrymen at Detroit under Gen. Hull. Some months later Hull lost his nerve and surrendered this valuable post which had cost the Americans a number of lives and much anxiety. It was a disgraceful episode, a blot on the pages of Michigan's history Hull was maligned as a cowardly rascal and his men taken prisoners with cruel treatment by the English. Captain Allen fully expected to be hung or shot, but his Masonry saved him as it has thousaads, justly and unjustly, and he got away from his captors and shortly afterward we find him at Mscoota Siac in 1827, doing his level best to subdue the raw lands and make history for us. He had brought a number of sheep with him so that his little farm soon assumed rural characteristics. Here he met jovial old Chief Baw Beese of the Pottawattomies, and be it said the family of Moses Allen ever held the deepest respect of the Indians. Not many years later the captain decided to name his community "Allen's Prairie" and such it remains one hundred years later.

If you visit the village of Allen in north-west Hillsdale county you will find the little cemetery where this worthy pioneer lies sleeping and a bronze marker adorns the grave, erected by Daughters of the American Revolution. So far as known the Allens were the first whites to settle in Hillsdale county During the first ten years the Pottawattomies had lodges in the vicinity extending eastward to Baw Beese Lake. The Allen family counted their saddest experience the death of the Indian woman "Wenona" daughter of the chief. She proved unfaithful and murdered her husband. According to Indian customs she had to die at the hands of her husband's brother who came up from the South to execute her. Baw Beese sternly condemned his daughter to death and the execution was duly carried out in spite of the pleas of Mr. and Mrs. Allen who were unwilling spectators of the affair. Tradition does not tell us how Wenona was executed.

Poultry Men Plan New Organization

Certification of baby chicks, in order that purchasers may know the stock they are buying, is one of the chief aims of a newly formed state poultrymen's organization, known as the Michigan Poultry Improvement Association.

Final steps of organization are to be taken at a meeting in Grand Rapids on June 4, according to J. A. Hannah, of East Lansing, secretary of the new body, and extension specialist at M. S. C.

The association is designed as a parent organization under which hatcherymen, certified flock owners and poultrymen interested in breeding birds for show purposes can work harmoniously for the benefit of the poultry industry in the state says Hannah.

The certification work with baby chicks is considered one of the most important activities of the new association. The present plans are said to call for culling and eventually blood testing of all flocks under the supervision of the State Department of Agriculture. Neighboring states are said to have been certifying chicks for several years.

Representatives of the poultry department at the college, the State Department of Agriculture, and hatcherymen themselves will attend the Grand Rapids meeting.

Announce Winners In Stock Judging

High schools scattered over a wide area were returned winners in the annual judging contests held at the M. S. C. recently in connection with the round up of students in the "Smith Hughes" schools of the state. The Smith Hughes schools are those teaching agriculture and home economics, under the provisions of the act from which they take their name.

More than 1,000 boys and girls attended the conference and took part in the various judging events, which formed an important part of the two day meeting. Sixty five different high schools were represented.

Winners, as announced this week after a careful study of the records submitted, show that Mason high school led in grain judging, with Dansville and Grand Ledge in second and third places. Owosso was number one in stock judging, followed by Mt. Pleasant and Blissfield, in the order named.

The poultry classes found Monroe high in first place, Allegan second, and Hillsdale third. Competition in all groups was said to be unusually keen, due both to the large number of entries and to the high quality of work done.

NEW PLAN FOR FINANCING ELECTRIC LINES TO FARMERS

Eastern Power Company Works Out Table of Alternative Methods, Based on Number of Customers Per Mile — Successful Thus Far

Rates for electric service on the farm that give promise of proving satisfactory to both farmer and power company have been established by the Adirondack Power and Light Corporation of Schenectady, N. Y. These rates, which are not any indication of what may or may not be possible in other sections of the country, seem nevertheless to be a real contribution toward the solution of this pressing question.

In the case of the Adirondack company, the density of population, the character of the country, the kind of farms served and the cost of materials and of line construction have been such that these rates could apply. Such considerations enter into every effort to take electric lines to farms.

The farmer's problem is to get electric service at a cost low enough to make it profitable for him to use it. The utility company's problem is to supply the service at a price that will afford a fair return on the capital invested.

No Disappointments So Far

The Adirondack plan is the culmination of two years' intensive study, and, according to officials of the company, no case has yet been brought to their attention which cannot be taken care of under the provisions of its formula. In fact, the company now stands ready to extend service anywhere within its franchise area. The reply, "We will extend service if so many signatures are sercured," etc., so common with utility companies to inquiries for service, is now changed by the Adirondack Company to, "We will gladly extend service for you, and the terms will be so and so, in accordance with our tariff regulations."

The outstanding feature of the plan, as filed with the New York State Public Service Commission, is a table from which it is an easy matter to determine the terms of any rural extension. This gives the minimum monthly bill and deposit necessary, according to the number of customers per mile. The plan provides for two ways of sharing this expense, a flat minimum monthly bill or a lower minimum monthly bill plus a cash deposit by the customer.

Farms operated by tenants where the owner would hesitate to make a cash payment toward the line, and where the tenant would also be reluctant to make a cash deposit to secure electricity for a farm which he might vacate in a year or so, are expected to favor the minimum bill plan. In the case where the owner occupies the farm, the other plan of a deposit and a lower minimum bill will undoubtedly be favored.

How the Plan Works Out

In explaining this table, John L. Haley, commercial manager of the Adirondack Company, pointed out that where there are eight farmers to the mile desiring electric service, his company would build the line, without cost to the farmer, under terms whereby each farmer would use not less than $3 worth of electricity a month, as explained above. Where there are six farmers to the mile, each farmer would be required to pay a minimum bill of $4 per month or deposit $130 with the company, as part cost of the extension, and thereby assure a minimum bill of $3.

Where there are four farmers to the mile, the minimum bill would be $6, provided the customer does not desire to share in the extension expense. In case he does, there are three ways open to him. He can deposit $130 and accept a minimum bill of $5; deposit $265 and accept a minimum bill of $4; or deposit $400 and his minimum bill will be but $3.

Each farmer's case is treated individually—that is, one farmer in the six-to-a-mile extension can agree to a minimum bill of $4, whereas his neighbor can deposit $130 and have a minimum bill of $3.

City Rates for Farmers

Service supplied to customers from these rural lines will be charged for at the regular city rates. This is another point in which the Adirondack plan differs from others, it being the company's belief that with a low price for energy the farmer can economically use it in large quantities. Other companies have felt that they must charge a higher rate per kilowatt hour than obtains in the cities or that they must have a service charge in addition to so much per kilowatt hour for all electricity used. The Adirondack Company believes that with rates on the farm as low as they are in the city the farmer can economically use considerable energy and that this abundant use of service will make it possible for the company to extend its lines to serve farm customers.

One of the greatest obstacles in present day farm electrification is that when an extension is desired not all the residents along the proposed line will agree to share the expense. Then, after a few have assumed the expense and the line is installed, the others will ask for service and there is no way to compel them to assume a proportional share of the installation cost.

Under this new plan, say, four farmers to the mile may desire electric service. They each agree to a minimum monthly bill of $6, or perhaps each deposits $400 in cash and agree to a minimum bill of $3 per month Later two more farmers within the same mile desire service. It then becomes a six-farmers-to-the-mile line and the difference in deposit originally made and that required by the new conditions is refunded to the original four customers.

Minimum Bill or a Deposit, As Preferred

This is the table of minimum monthly rates, with the alternative deposit, according to the number of farms per mile, established by the Adirondack Power and Light Corporation of Schenectady, N. Y., throughout its territory:

Mixed Lines Allowed For

If a customer discontinues service, the deposit or minimum bill for the remaining customers will be determined on the same basis as for a new extension. Adjustments on deposits or minimum bills will be determined on December 31 of each year.

Consideration is given to street lights or industrial uses of electricity, such as mills, etc. In figuring the number of customers to the mile, each $100 annual revenue received from such uses is considered as equivalent to one customer unless such lights or mills require a special type of line. Thus, there may be but six farms to the mile using electricity and a mill may be using electricity bringing in $200 a year revenue. The six farmers will then be rated on the eight-customers-to-the-mile basis and thereby be allowed a lower minimum bill.

FARM LIGHTING AIDED

Ideas in G-E Farm Book on What Lights to Use and Where to Put Them

In an attractive publication recently issued by the General Electric Company, the G-E Farm Book, a complete plan for lighting the farm and the farm buildings by electricity is sketched out. Not only the farm house, but the barnyard and barn itself, dairy buildings, the stable for horses or cows, the silo and granary, the hay mow, the garage and tool shed, and the poultry house are included in the suggested method of electrical illumination.

A diagram of an electric lighting system for every floor of the farm house is shown. There is also a diagram suggesting how the control of the lights at the barn, poultry house and in the barnyard can be obtained from the farmer's dwelling house.

On Protection of Wires

"In wiring farm buildings," says the G-E Farm Book, "conduit or armored cable should be employed. While there is no likelihood of fire with insulated electric wires, moisture or ammonia fumes may rot the insulation, rubbing against walls may wear it, or rats and mice may gnaw it, causing live wires to be exposed.

"To avoid breakage of lamps in shed, at the silo chute and similar places, wire guards can be used. In dairy cattle exercise barns, or other buildings where stock is allowed to run loose, switches should be placed at least six feet from the floor, so that the stock cannot strike against them. It is best to fasten over them a wooden box-like cover with an open bottom, as cattle will sometimes attempt to investigate an exposed switch with their tongues.

"It is advisable in barns and especially in dairy buildings to install porcelain or moisture-proof switches and wiring devices. They last longer and are generally far more satisfactory than metal devices in outside installations or where there is much moisture."

Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois and president of the American Holstein Friesian association, will deliver the commencement address at the M. S. C. on June 22. It will be the sixty seventh annual graduating exercises at the state college. Three hundred men and women will be granted degrees. The divisions of agriculture, engineering, home economics, veterinary medicine, and applied science and liberal arts will all be represented among the candidates for bachelor of science or bachelor of arts awards.

Divorcing Alcohol And Gasoline

A vast amount of indignation has been aroused in Massachusetts over automobile drivers who, under the influence of liquor, cause accident or death. The whole discussion shows how public thought, opinion, and action, perhaps, would be cleared by a wider understanding of the modern scientific facts about alcohol showing that "drunkenness" is not the sole measure of injury by alcohol, that it is only a late stage in the process of alcoholic intoxication, and that at stages earlier than drunkenness, there may be a degree of intoxication that will interfere with the safe operation of a motor vehicle.

E. E. Whiting, a well-known writer of signed daily articles in the Boston Herald, says of this conflict of ideas:

"The man who uses alcohol beverages in what he believes to be moderation, or who used to do so, and who drives an automobile resents being thought of as a 'drunken driver.' "

That man, of course, needs the information of modern scientific experiment. Modern experience has taught the other man thus described by Mr. Whiting.

"The man whose children go to school or to the corner store, or over to grandmother's house resents the presence at the steering wheel of anyone who is even one-half of one percent below efficiency as a driver."

Comments received by Mr. Whiting indicate that a part of the public has learned that no amount of alcohol is safe at the wheel. One writes:

"While perhaps I might hold a pint of pretty stiff stuff without showing any effect, I consider that for the general good I should not take even half an ounce if I am to drive a car, and if I do drive after taking anything intoxicating, I am perfectly willing to take whatever medicine the laws prescribe.

"The matter of killing or maiming a score or more of people every week in the state is of more moment to a person of my disposition than is half an ounce of good whiskey, which the bootlegger has no right to sell me. My neighbor, Smith, holds only about a teaspoonful, but if he takes that amount he has sense enough to stay in the basement until it works off, which I think is a very good plan."

Referring to a hypothetical case previously mentioned, where a driver with liquor on his breath when an accident occurred for which he was in no wise responsible, was charged with drunken driving, another correspondent writes:

"Why not put against this hypothetical case the best kind of a 'safety first' rule: When you drive a car let the stuff severely alone. Why not put the emphasis on that? Such a rule followed by all drivers would save the driver, the state registrar of motor vehicles, and the courts a lot of heart burning trouble in trying to make nice distinctions."

The danger of alcohol even in small quantities. This is the fact that needs now to be driven into the mind of the person who wants to drive a car. The more quickly the modern scientific facts on this point are thoroughly disseminated, the more quickly the menace of the driver under the influence of liquor will be ended. Nobody really wants to maim or kill his fellow man or an innocent child. With these facts widely known and their import grasped, the question of the alcoholized driver will reduce itself to a point where the law will have no difficulty in taking care of the small remnant of willful drinkers who dare to take their place at the wheel.

How frequently do we hear today of a locomotive engineer haled to court because of a railroad accident due to his drinking? So rarely that when such a thing does occur it is a matter of national comment. And how did this come about? Years ago, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers adopted a rule requiring every member, whether on duty or off duty, to be an abstainer from alcoholic drinks. They recognized that drinking in any degree whatever might unfit a man for duty, especially in an emergency. An engineer might not be able to "stay in the basement" until his drink "worked off." Neither can the motor vehicle driver be sure that some emergency will not compel him to take the wheel after his drink that he thought he was going to have time to "get over."

The railroad companies later supplemented the Brotherhood rules by company rules forbidding the use of intoxicating liquors by operatives. But the engineers pointed the way to safety by assuming personal responsibility, agreeing to let drink alone at all times. Would the automobile driver who insists on his "personal liberty" to drink, like to smell liquor on the breath of the railroad engineer to whom he entrusts himself or his children for a railroad journey? Why should he not be as conscientious as the engineer?

Laws will do someting to pull alcohol from behind the wheel. Law in itself is partly educational. But the menace to the public from alcohol at the wheel will be most quickly removed when the driver learns the truth about the danger in small amounts of alcohol. Thousands of new young drivers take the wheel each year. Are home and school doing their best to teach this truth and to harness it to the spirit of considerate regard for the rights and safety of others?

Dry Officials Will Nip The Wets

While the plan once inaugurated to hold as witnesses all persons found in blind pigs by federal raiders was stopped after the first trial a new system is now being worked that is going to make drinking unpopular in this part of Michigan. Hereafter, federal officials will arrest all bar patrons, or persons at tables in cafes, who are found with liquor in front of them or in possession. The men and women caught with the goods will be tried for illegal possession of liquor, not held as witnesses against the blind pig operator as once contemplated. Two customers were arrested when the Sinbad cafe was raided and both are now out on $2,000 bond awaiting action of the grand jury. National Prohibition Director Haynes, while in Detroit this week, stated that this plan was proving very effective in small towns as men and women did not care for the publicity that followed arrest.

The government will send twenty odd new patrol boats to the border before July 1st, same now being completed at Bay City. They are fast and will be stationed at points of vantage along the river front.

Also, a new head has been named for the local prohibition forces and he will first seek the source of local beer, aiming in this way to put the hundreds of Detroit blind pigs out of business.

"It's going to be a long, dry summer, with many people affected with the 'thirst' that can't be quenched,' one of the veteran border runners explained to a friend, while discussing the weather. "Expect that the increased consumption of home made hootch and brew will cause a big increase of business at the new county morgue. This spasm is going to be one that will long be remembered in Michigan, but no one knows how long it will last."

Mr. Haynes, during his visit, said that the people in this part of Michigan should be willing to try prohibition once, just to see whether or not they really did like it and that is the aim of the government in sending such a large crew of officers to this territory.

Camp Namroun

Camp Namroun, the summer camp for girls maintained by the Young Women's Christian Association in this southern Michigan district, will be held this summer at Hemlock Lake. All girls living in Branch, Hillsdale or Lenawee counties may attend this camp. The dates are for High School girls June 22 through July 1st, for grade school girls July 2 through 8. The rates for camp are $1 a day which includes all expenses. Girls living on farms who wish may bring food instead of money by arranging with the District secretary at the City Hall in Hillsdale.

Program for each day is carefully planned and includes a variety of activities which interest all kinds of girls. For the athletic girl there are sports, hikes and swimming, for the woods lover nature lore and camp craft, for the imaginative girl stunts, handicraft etc., for everyone a growing sense of God in his world and the enriching of life through growing friendships.

Mothers will be glad to know something of the equipment and personnel of the camp leadership. This year through the efforts of many friends there will be erected a screened building to be used as kitchen, dining room and assembly room in rainy weather. The girls sleep in tents, seven girls and a leader in each group. The leaders also carry responsibility for the various camp activities—swimming, sports stunts etc. Miss Emma Applegreen the public health nurse of Hillsdale will be the camp nurse. Other program leaders are Mildred Clark of Hillsdale, Misses Helen and Mary Hodgman and Blanche Sheffield of Coldwater, Mildred Stiefal of Reading and Maxine Galloway, of Hudson. Mrs. Marie Harmon and Mrs. Blanche Sowers of Hillsdale will be camp cooks. Miss Inez Ensign, general secretary will be camp director.

Registrations should be made by June 15th. Further information may be obtained at the Y. W. C. A. office in the City Hall.

WHERE'S NORHEYS?

SYNOPSIS. — In London the teller of the story of the adventures of "King Tommy," and known hereafter as "Uncle Bill," is informed by Lord Norheys, son of an old friend, that Lord Troyte, head of the British foreign office, Norheys' uncle, has a scheme to make him (Norheys) king of Lystria, in central Europe, through marriage to Calypso, daughter of King Wladislaws, deposed monarch of that country. A financier, Procopius Cable, knows there is oil in profusion in Lystria, and with an English king on the throne the output could be secured for England. Norheys, in love with a stage dancer, Viola Temple, is not enthusiastic over the proposition. The patriarch, Menelaus, highest ecclesiastical dignitary in Lystria, is heartily in favor of the restoration of the monarchy, and Cable has generously financed the sentiment. Calypso is making a living dancing in the "Mascotte," Berlin cabaret. Norheys refuses to entertain the idea of giving up Viola Temple, to whom he is secretly engaged. "Uncle Bill's" sister Emily urges him to secure a passport from Lord Troyte for a certain Janet Church, strongminded female who wants to visit Lystria in the interests of a society for world peace. Janet Church leaves for Berlin. "Uncle Bill" is again appealed to by his sister to find a certain curate (name not given) who has left his parish in Ireland for a visit to Berlin, and cannot be found.

"Viola threw his dirty money in his face," said Norheys, "and you'd have thought that would have been enough for him. But it wasn't. When he saw she wasn't going to be bribed he took a high moral tone with her, talked about ruining the prospects of a bright young life—mine, the beast meant, not hers. There'd have been some sense in talking about getting married ruining her prospects considering the way she dances. But what was the good of talking about ruining me? All the same, that's what he did. He told her all about that Calypso girl and what a scoop it would be for me to marry her. Now, what do you think of that, Uncle Bill?"

"Did she promise to give you up?"

"Of course she didn't. And what the devil good would it have been if she had? I wouldn't have given her up. What I always say is this: If a fellow won't give up a girl, there's no use the girl's trying to give up the fellow, especially if she happens to be fond of him. You see what I mean, don't you, Uncle Bill? Well, after making Viola cry, which is a thing no man would do unless he was an actual devil, that octopus took to threatening her. He said that, being a princess, the Calypso girl could marry me if she chose; only had to say the word and there we were. Viola doesn't know much about princesses, but she didn't believe that. All the same, it made her more than a bit uncomfortable."

It seems, as I heard afterward, to have roused Miss Temple to simple but effective action. I do not know whether she told Norheys what she had done. If she did, he did not confide in me.

"So you can tell Uncle Ned," he said, "to keep that disgusting Semitic toad of his chained up for the future. If I catch him fooling round Viola's flat again there'll be murder done."

"I'm afraid," I said, "that this will be a disappointment to your uncle. He's rather set his heart on seeing you king of Lystria."

"I haven't the slightest objection to being king of Lystria."

"But you can't be if you won't marry the princess."

"I'm not so sure about that," said Norheys. "After all, if a thing can't be done in one way it generally can in another. Just you try and make that clear to Uncle Ned. Tell him I'm an uncommonly dutiful nephew and all that, as keen as nuts on bucking up the family and pouring oil all over the good old empire; but there's one thing I can't and won't do."

"Marry the princess?"

"No. I'll marry her if I have to, but I won't go back on Viola."

I never made all that clear to Troyte. Indeed, I never tried to. But Norheys succeeded in explaining himself, more or less, to his uncle, and I heard no more of the matter for some little time.

Another worry—a small, even a ridiculous one—came to make my life uneasy. My sister Emily wrote to me that she lost a curate. She wanted me to set the whole machinery of the British empire to work to find the creature for her. He was not, it appeared, a particularly valuable curate. Emily admitted that she did not like him. She went so far as to say that he was not the sort of man who ought to have been in Holy Orders. But he was the only curate there was in Emily's parish and they could not get on without him because the rector, Canon Pyke, had fallen suddenly ill.

The curate had gone off on a holiday, which, according to Emily, he did not deserve. Almost immediately after his departure Canon Pyke had broken down.

"All we've heard from him since he left is one postcard which came from Berlin and has a picture of a museum on it. I don't think, considering all that happened during the war, that Berlin is a place a clergyman ought to go to for a holiday, not a good clergyman. It seems to me a callous thing to do, scarcely what I should call Christian. Anyhow, he went there. At least he said he was going there, and I suppose he really did, for that is where the postcard came from. He left his address before he started, in case anything went wrong in the parish and we wanted him back. Directly the poor canon broke down Mrs. Pyke telegraphed to Berlin, but no answer came. Then I telegraphed. When I got no answer I telegraphed again to the manager of the hotel. I got a reply saying that he had left two days after he arrived and not given any address.

"Now I know that with your influence and all your London friends—I am sure Lord Edmund Troyte could do something to help us—"

Apparently I was to set our consular service to work to find a curate who was rampaging about Central Europe. I should look a nice fool if I went to the Foreign office with a request like that. I was inclined to agree with Emily. That curate of hers should never have been a clergyman. I sympathized with her, and with Canon Pyke, and with the parish. I even sympathized slightly with the curate. But I was not going to do anything.

I slipped Emily's letters into the "Unanswered" basket on top of her earlier letter about Janet Church. But I was not allowed to dismiss the matter from my mind. I got another letter the next day.

"I'm afraid I forgot to mention," she wrote, "that the address he gave us was the Adlon hotel. He said that if anything went wrong in the parish he would come back at once."

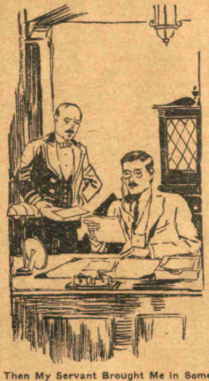
She had not forgotten to give me that address. What Emily had forgotten to tell me was the curate's name. That rather tied my hands, or would have tied them if I had meant to do anything.

Next day I got a fourth letter from Emily. In it she enclosed twelve penny stamps.

"Please get our ambassador in Berlin to telegraph," she wrote, "as soon as he finds out where our curate is. I don't know what it costs to send a telegram to Berlin, but I send twelve stamps which ought to be enough considering the present state of the exchange. Besides, an ambassador probably gets his telegrams sent cheap."

That letter joined the others in the basket.

By the same post came one from Canon Pyke himself written in pencil from his bed. He began apologetically. He would never have dreamed of troubling me with his private affairs had not his friend Mrs. Chambers (my sister Emily) urged him to write to me on a subject very near to his heart at the moment—the lost curate.



Then My Servant Brought Me in Some Letters Which Had Just Arrived by Post.

"The dear fellow," he went on, "is not in all respects exactly what a clergyman ought to be. At the same time, he is a worthy young man, full of heartiness and energy. What makes us fear that he may have involved himself in some serious difficulty is that he is by natural disposition both daring and adventurous, more so perhaps than one of our younger clergy ought to be. If you can—"

He, too, seemed to think that I ought to get the Foreign office to send out a search party to Berlin or perhaps to get the ambassador and the head of the Inter-Allied Mission of Control to take the matter up.

His letter joined Emily's in the basket.

Then Emily took to telegraphing to me. She is a frugal woman whose spare money goes to missionary societies, but she spent a lot on telegrams. They kept getting longer and longer. There was no doubt that she was in earnest about finding that curate.

I disposed of the fourth telegram in the usual way. The pile in the basket on my desk was becoming large.

Then my servant brought me in some letters which had just arrived by post. I glanced at the envelopes anxiously, fearing that either Emily or her dear Canon Pyke had written again. I was relieved to find that the only real letter was addressed in Edmund Troyte's writing. Along with it was a postcard. I began with Edmund Troyte.

He invited me to dine with him that very evening.

"You and I," he wrote, "nobody else. I want to talk to you about Norheys."

I was getting a little tired of being talked to about Norheys. I admit that I am that young man's godfather, but that does not make me responsible for all his actions. Lord Edmund ought to be capable of looking after his own nephew. Then it occurred to me that if Edmund Troyte went on worrying me I might as well have the satisfaction of worrying him. I would tell him the story of Emily's curate and see how he liked being consulted about business which is none of his. I telephoned my acceptance of his invitation and then went back to the postcard.

It came from Janet Church and announced that she had got as far as Berlin and meant to go farther. Janet was staying in the Adlon hotel. The address reminded me of Emily's curate and a really brilliant idea occurred to me. I would give her a little in return.

I wrote her a long letter in which I explained that a really valuable curate had disappeared, having been last heard of at the Adlon hotel in Berlin. I said that foul play was suspected, which I am sure was true. Emily evidently thought that the young man had gone off on a disreputable spree, which would have been foul play on his part. Canon Pyke feared that he had been decoyed into a den of infamy and there robbed—foul play on the part of someone else. I asked Janet to stay a few days longer in Berlin to go into the matter thoroughly. It was just the sort of thing she ought to do.

"The curate's name," I wrote, "has unfortunately not been told me. But that won't be any real obstacle. There cannot be many English curates at large in Berlin. If you find one at all, he'll probably be the one we want. He has a hearty manner, is full of energy and good spirits. In all probability his face is round and plump. My sister Emily is most anxious about him, so I'm sure you'll do your best."

Then I wrote to Emily.

"I'm delighted to help in any way I can in the good work of finding your lost curate. I am dining with Edmund Troyte this evening and intend to put the whole case before him. You can confidently count on everything possible being done. I have also written to Janet Church, who is in Berlin. She is just the kind of woman who will find a curate however carefully he is hidden—or, if your suspicion is justified, however carefully he has hidden himself. It would be a thousand pities if he were permanently lost. But we need not anticipate that. Give my kind regards to the canon."

CHAPTER VI

Troyte and I dined very comfortably and, being wise men, talked about nothing unpleasant until the business of eating was over. When I had finished my second glass of port we went into the library for our coffee. A servant put a small table before us, set coffee, cognac and cigarettes on it and then went away.

I was just about to begin the tale of Emily's lost curate when Troyte asked me an abrupt question.

"Do you know where Norheys is?"

"At this hour," I said, "he's generally in the Belvedere."

The Belvedere is the theater in which Miss Temple dances. Norheys, unless he has some important engagement elsewhere, hangs about her dressing room until her turn is over. Then he drives her home.

"He's not at the Belvedere tonight," said Troyte. "In fact, he's not in town at all."

"He didn't say anything to me about going away," I said, "but then I haven't seen him for the last two days."

"Nobody has seen him for the last two days," said Troyte. "I wanted to speak to him today and I telephoned to his rooms. His man told me that he went away the day before yesterday. He left no address so his letters aren't being forwarded. I made inquiries at his clubs, but he left no address at any of them. All his man could tell me was that he went off with two suitcases and the taxi man was ordered to take him to Charing Cross."

> Well, in the circumstances it does seem a bit important to know where is Norheys. Has he skipped out or eloped?

All Men of Unusual Strength Are Samsons

The story of Sampson is found in Judges 13, and the three following chapters. This man takes his place in Scripture as a judge or ruler, an office which he filled for 20 years; as a Nazarite, that is, one bound by a vow of a peculiar kind to be set apart from others for the service of the Almighty. The obligation was really for a definite time, and during that time the Nazarite was bound to abstain from wine and every production of the vine, and from every kind of intoxicating drink. He was forbidden to cut the hair of his head, or to approach any dead body. In the third place Samson appears as a man endowed with supernatural physical strength. It is this latter quality that first comes to one's mind when he is mentioned, and it is because of that wonderful quality that any man of unusual strength is called a Samson. For instance, a London carpenter, named Thomas Topham, has been called "the British Samson." It is related that in Cold Bath fields, London, on May 28, 1741, in the presence of thousands of spectators Topham lifted three hogsheads of water, weighing 1,836 pounds. Topham was born in 1710, and died in 1753. It is related that he was driven to suicide by domestic troubles.

Of Two Minds on Silhouette; Chic in Topcoats and Suits

Two Pretty Models.

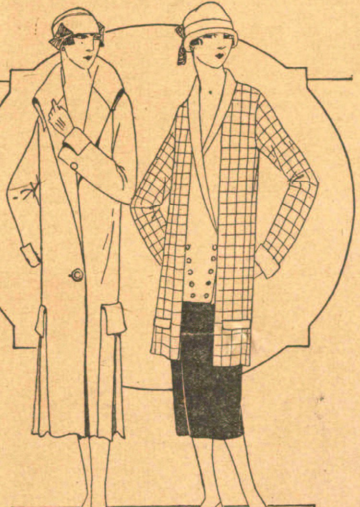
On the other hand there are just as many straight-line dresses, and so long as figured silks continue to fascinate, they are likely to divide honors with the newcomers. Fanciful patterns in fabrics look best when simply made up. In the dress at the right a long tunic of printed silk is bordered with plain crepe and worn over a skirt with the same finish. There are many color combinations in these printed silks and of course, black and white in cool-looking, distinctive patterns. White crepe de chine is used for the collar and tie.

Silk and cotton mixtures, in crepey materials are so like the printed silks that it is difficult to tell them apart. These fabrics are washable and much less expensive than silk.

All these printed fabrics make the way of the home dressmaker a path of flowers—literally and figuratively. They are adapted to the simplest designs and discourage fussiness because the interest of costumes made of them lies in their colors and printed patterns.

The chic topcoat and the spirited suit shown here prove once again that, whatever the trend of the mode may be, the French are to be depended on to make the most of it. Paris leads in her new and untried style ideas, at the beginning of each season, like a company of debutantes ready to be presented at Fashion's court. Those that make a good impression are soon made much of—those that don't quietly disappear. In this light topcoat pictured in the sketch several approved style features have been cleverly developed—"Paris" is written in the ingenuity with which the designer has introduced the flare in the skirt portion, where wide, inverted plaits are set in at each side under simulated pocket flaps. The turned-back half-cuffs reveal another touch of genius for designing and the single button on each sleeve is a consistent finishing touch as the coat fastens with only one button. Smooth faced cloths, as flannel or broadcloth, are used for these summer coats and the demand is for light colors in them—copenhagen and china blue, lanvin and other light greens, tan, cocoa and red are popular.

The suit shown in the sketch is even more unmistakably French than its companion. It is a crisp-looking affair, with a plain, black skirt and checked coat in black and red, that hangs open at the front. This front opening discloses that perennial favorite in the French tailleur—the white pique vest—not in a brief glimpse but in an impressive expanse. The vest has a surplice opening and is finished with two rows of handsome pearl buttons, put on in slanting lines. White pique cuffs emphasize the plainness of the sleeves. There are several color combinations that might be used in this suit quite as effectively as black and red—none of them outclass black and white.



Embodying the Paris Idea.

Emergency Hay Crops Must Meet Shortage

With a greatly reduced red clover and timothy hay crop staring them in the face as a result of the dry spring season, Michigan farmers will in many cases be forced tc resort to emergency short season hay crops, according to crops men at the M. S. C.

Alfalfa and sweet clover are said to be coming through nicely, and those who have fields of these crops to cut for hay are congratulating themselves. Many others, however will not even bother to cut their clovor and timothy fields unless relief comes soon in the way of general rains. For these, the emergency "short season" crops are important.

"The present emergency can be met partially by getting busy and seeding some shorter seasoned crop, to tide over the shortage" says L. D. Kurtz, extension specialist in farm crops at the college. These emergency crops produce excellent yields within a single season.

Soy beans, sudan grass, the millets, and fodder corn are among the short season crops which can be recommended. These crops should be seeded as soon as possible—the earlier the better. Well prepared seed beds are important.

More detailed information on handling these short season crops can be obtained from local county agriculture agents, or directly from the farm crops department at the M. S. C.

Arctic Explorations Are Different

Speaking of explorations in Arctic regions naturally causes us to hark back to the days of 1881 when the ill-fated Greeley expedition started out from St. Johns Newfoundland to visit the frozen wastes beyond the Arctic Circle. Twenty five able bodied men were chosen to form the party under command of Lieutenant A. W. Greenley. In telling their experiences Brigadier General Brainard one of the seven survivors, says:

"We reached the place selected for winter quarters in Lady Franklin Bay, Grinnell Land, latitude 81 degress 44 minutes, about the middle of August. The house in which we were to take abode was built in sections, a departure in those days. This structure was 60 feet long by 22 feet wide. It consisted of double walls, doors and windows, and had a lining of tar paper. Jt was considered a comfortable habitation for the winter of 1881 and the succeeding year."

During one whole winter the party starved eating seal skin, shrimps, kelp and sea moss. One by one the men died, as the rations became shorter, and as the rescue party found them only seven were alive and they were in a terribly weakened condition also suffered the awful torture of frigid temperatures. When the men were found they were taken on board the boat bathed, dressed in pajamas and put to bed. The first thing they were given was milk punch and a cracker or two. Of course this only served to make them more ravenous. The next ration was a table spoonful of chopped beef raw, a little oatmeal and condensed milk combined with brandy. The awful circumstance of starvation and the reports which leaked out afterward were scandalous. It was claimed that some of the corpses were eaten by survivors and this report so far as known has never been proven incorrect. Today the manner of reaching the polar regions has vastly changed and the departure of Amundson has awakened new interest in the Arctic. The above authority states that in his opinion the giant dirigible "Shenandoah" could make the trip easily without mishap. But of course he ignores the possibility of death in the landing among unknown ice hummocks and the other dangers. The Government at one time planned to send a dirigible on this trip but public indignation forbade. It is understood that some of the best aerial men of the country volunteered to manipulate the "Shenandoah" Greeley's men only came within 300 miles of the Pole which was considered a good record. Since that time both Peary and Cook claimed the honor of its exact location. Cook, however has been proven a genuine imposter in his business dealing and so no recognizance was taken of his claim, while Peary could not establish a very strong case.

Obituary

Joseph L. Beecher was born in Hanover, Jackson County Michigan October 19th 1844. He was the second son of Walter and Mary Hopkins Beecher. Died at his home in Wheatland, Hillsdale County the evening of June 7, 1925 of heart trouble and a complication of diseases. He was 81 years of age.

When 4 years old he came with his parents to Wheatland and has since been a resident of Hillsdale County.

He was married to Catherine McGregor of Somerset, Hillsdale County February 19th 1873. To this union no children were born. Mr. Beecher was a highly respected citizen and leaves a host of friends who sincerely mourn with the bereaved companion and relatives.

We leave him in the hand of One Who doeth all things well. And the surviving friends, who are only waiting till the shadows are a little longer grown, can be offered no stronger consolation than the well founded hope of soon being reunited in the glad restitution times, in which he will be resurrected to joyful participation.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Virgil Hunt under Mason auspices Wednesday at 2:00 p. m. at his late Wheatland home and burial was in the Pease cemetery. Three neices Miss Myra Beecher of this place, Mrs. Gertrude Thompson of Hoxie, Mrs. Bernice McBain of Moscow, one sister Mrs. Dan Hoxie and the widow survive him.

"And may this hope in this dark hour sustain thee
And thy bruised hearts tho' crushed with pain,
That thro' thy falling tears, faith sees a shining rainbow.
For thou shalt meet thy loved and ost again.

Card of Thanks

We wish to extend our heartfelt thanks to the neighbors and friends for their timely assistance and kindnesses during the sickness and death of our loved one, and especially to those who furnished the hymns and Rev Hunt for his words of comfort.

A Notable Record

Phyllis and L. D. Walworth of Jerome, children of Lucien D. Walworth, we think are entitled to considerable credit for their punctual attendance at school the past year. They have driven to Jonesville, a distance of 14 miles, each day during the school year and have been neither absent or tardy the entire time. They have also made good standings. Phyllis was excused from examination as her reports were A-1. They have also taken instruction in music at Hillsdale College during the year in addition to their regular school curriculum. In music they have done remarkably well. It will be remembered they gave a recital at the Methodist church in this village a while back and were greeted by a crowded house. Their rendering on the saxaphone is extra good.

WHAT WILL BE THE RESULT

Over 1600 graduates were turned out this season by the University of Michigan, and one naturally conjectures where will all these highly efficient men and women find an outlet for their talents? The country is rapidly filling with trained workers and as the number increases, at the same ratio does highly proficient labor become cheapened. Not long age you heard of a U. of M. grad who found employment as a forest ranger in the great North-west. This man had graduated in Civil Engineering and was supposed to be worth from $15,000 to $20,000 per year at the profession, yet there he was grubbing along in the lonely forest at one-half to one quarter of it because as he expressed it, there did not seem to be a market for his brains in the East. The crux of the situation is, that with so many highly educated persons being turned loose into the wide world each year, the price of ability comes tumbling down to cheaper levels. True, many hundreds are called outside America to foreign nations in embassies and educational institutions. Often times the coveted job is carried away by a lesser qualified but more agreeable man.

It is a stubborn fact that to-day in the manufacturing plants of our cities where expert administration is required, by far more men as managers come from the strata just below University training—men who have spent years in practical work For instance, in a large printing plant at Chicago employing 2500 people, the pereentage of University trained heads of departments falls below 35, including the proprietor himself.

So, after all, the higher university seems to lose its significance, when it seeks te grab every more lucrative position.

Grass Lake probably has the meanest doctor on record. The other day a fire of serious origin menaced the village, burning two churches and some residences, and in all probability would have destroyed most of the town, had it not have been for Jackson's doughty fire fighters who arrived on the scene and squelched the flames. Grass Lake is fixed a good deal the same as North Adams—with nothing to fight fire with. During the excitement a fireman was put out of commission by a large cinder lodging in his eye. He went over to the Doc and had it removed—the cinder we mean—and Doc charged him one silver plunker for the job We suppose that medic just escaped hanging by a narrow margin when this became public. A purse was at once made up to pay the bill. It is heedless to say there is one doctor in Jackson connty whose immense popularity has been rimmed.

Forty interested people attended the meeting Saturday evening at the Masonic hall at Moscow, held for the purpose of organizing club work in the township. Clubs were organized with Mrs. L. Tracy as leader of the girls canning club, and F. J. Garrett, leader of the boys club. Hugh Gochanour, supervisor of the township, provided refreshments of ice cream.

We note with pleasure that the road from Franklin corners north to the Chicago turnpike, is being graded and repaired we suppose by the township. This is a wonderful improvement, since considerable traffic goes that way to points north. Moscow township certainly had some of the worst roads in the county but we are happy to say this condition is being rapidly done away with.

Rev. H. D. Henry, pastor of the Hillsdale Methodist church gave the address Sunday afternoon at the memorial services held at Mt. Pleasant cemetery, speaking on "The Flag of Freemen." Mrs. Virgil Hunt sang a solo, and other music was provided by a North Adams choir. J. I. Post and J. M. Williams of North Adams were re-elected as president and secretary treasurer of the cemetery association. The service was largely attended.

It seems like old days of the wet and sloppy Broad Street to hear of a real genuine "drunk" being arrested in Hillsdale but such is the case. On Sunday last the officers picked up M. Philpot for drunkenness and arraigned him before Justice Glenn Miller on Monday morning. He plead guilty and was fined $15.95. Another charge of carrying concealed weapons was also put up against him and he will have to answer to this June 25th. If Philpot had not filled pot so full this story might have been different. It is a puzzle where these boys get their stuff, since the price must be higher than a cat's back now and any man who would take on a spree certainly is extravagant to say the least. When a Plebeian like Philpot can pour a ten spot right down his throat at two "swallers" he needs a guardian

They Are Dandies

We feel quite puffed up when we consider how faithful some of our citizens are in giving us the happenings round-about the vicinity which we are not always able to reach ourselves. It is quite safe to say the people of this village have got the county beat along this particular line. Every week a number of folks drop in as they pass and remind us that this, that or the other thing has happened which maybe we know and maybe we don't. Now that is the way to run a successful newsy sheet and we hope and believe this habit will grow on the North Adamsites. We challenge any town in this country to produce a more attentive class of residents this way than we have, Atta Boy!

Don't be afraid somebody will criticise you for advertising your own business—the chances are they will condemn the editor for not getting your item. Remember it is how many items not how we get them that counts.

She can't Eat Grass Enough

A cow producing 35 lbs. of milk daily cannot maintain that yield unless she has about 30 lbs. of dry matter in her feed.

Fresh pasture, which is nearly 80% water, contains but a small percentage of dry matter. This means that the cow will have to eat at least 175 lbs. of grass per day if she is to maintain both condition and milk yield.

Will your cows be able to find and crop that amount of pasture every day this summer? That is what you are expecting of them if you rely on grass alone. The result? A loss of milk and money, because few cows can eat more than 90 lbs. of grass in one day.

The remedy is simple. Feed Larro with pasture through the season—at the ratio of 1 lb. of Larro for each 5 lbs. of milk when pasture is plentiful, with a gradual increase as summer advances. Thus you can prevent the summer slump in milk; bring your cows into the fall in better condition for their winter work; and make more profit for yourself.

Winterproof Roofs

It takes a roof of real quality to live through many winters of the sort enjoyed along our northern border. From December to March these roofs are subjected to high winds, snow, sleet, hail, with an occasional thaw to make matters worse.

It is for this reason that so many homes in this section are covered with Ruberoid Shingles and Roofing. The illustrations above—taken from actual photographs—especially the close-up of the dormer, show what these roofs have to put up with. Yet Ruberoid Shingles and Roofing thrive under just such punishment.

On many a building there are Ruberoid Roofs, 20, 25, and 30 years old with the limit of their endurance still to be determined. They have withstood the wear and tear of the elements in all parts of the world—in the Tropics and beyond the Arctic Circle.

Among the Ruberoid Products there is one which will fully meet your requirements, whether it be for a twenty-room residence or a three-room bungalow, a schoolhouse or a factory, a church or a theatre.

Come in or phone us today for samples and descriptive folders.

There is but one Ruberoid. Look for the Man on the Label.

Help That Achy Back!

Is backache making you miserable? Are you tired, nervous, "blue"—utterly played out? Have you suspected your kidneys? Your kidneys are the blood-filters. Once they fall behind in their work, there's slow poisoning of blood and nerves. Then is apt to come backache, headaches, dizziness, and other annoying kidney irregularities. Don't wait! If your kidneys are sluggish, help them with a stimulant diuretic. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are recommended the world over. Ask your neighbor!

A Michigan Case

Mrs. D. Shea, 101 Shamrock St., Ironwood, Mich., says: "I had pains through my back and when I bent over, to do my housework, sharp pains darted across my kidneys. I felt all out of sorts and run down. My kidneys didn't act regularly, either. One box of Doan's Pills drove the trouble away."

Ancient Gems on View in Wisconsin College

The oldest manufactured jewelry in the world, ivory, deer horn and stone beads used as ornaments by cave men and women of prehistoric Europe, was recently brought to this country by Alonzo W. Pond of the Beloit college museum, and is now on display there. Besides the beads, which were found in the Cave La Blanchard, department of Dordogne, France, the sharp blades and stone drills with which the beads were pierced are also included in the collection, Science Service says.

In order to display the collection to the best advantage, the various beads have been strung in the form of a necklace similar to the kind which may have been worn more than 20,000 years ago.

Science Wars on Pests

Bad table manners and loud chewing are the undoing of certain insects and grubs inhabiting sacks of peanuts imported from the Orient. Their noisy champing, intensified by means of a newly invented microphone, enables the customs service and pure food bureau officials to detect their presence. The new apparatus is also useful in detecting insect pests in fruit and stored grain.

Modern Church Buildings

Many modern churches have been built to include office buildings. Los Angeles and Baltimore have four each. New York and Detroit come next with three in each city; Chicago has two; Kansas City, Mo., Boston, Cincinnati, Syracuse and Rochester, N. Y., Des Moines and Paterson, N. J., each have a building of this type.

Jazz Silences Bagpipes

The jazz craze has hit the towns in Scotland, where the bagpipe has had to give way to the popular saxophone. The fad came in with an operetta brought over from London and the music stores found an unprecedented demand for saxophones and met it quickly by telegraphic orders to the English cities.

Use of a picture-story method of teaching reading has been tried with 10,000 children in Detroit schools. It is hoped that by this purposeful self-teaching children will make as much progress in five months as is ordinarily made in a year.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Satisfactory Trip of the President to Address the Norse-Americans.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

IT IS likely that President Coolidge never made a more successful and satisfactory trip than that to St. Paul, where he addressed an immense throng at the Norse-American centennial celebration. The journey from Washington was made speedily and in comfort, and the Presidential party was greeted everywhere with cheers. On the Minnesota state fair grounds Mr. Coolidge paid eloquent tribute to the Scandinavian immigrants and their descendants, who have so wonderfully developed that part of the country, and praised their devotion to the basic principles of Americanism.

"Religious liberty, educational and economic opportunity, constitutional rights, the integrity of the law, these do not emanate from the government," he declared. "Their abiding place is with the people.

"They come from the consecration of the father, the love of the mother, and the devotion of the children. They are the product of that honest, earnest, and tireless effort that goes into the rearing of the family altar and the making of the home. When I look upon you and realize what you are and what you have done, I know that in your hands our country is secure.

"You have laid up your treasure in what America represents, and there will your heart be also.

"You have given your pledge to the land of the free, and the pledge of the Norwegian people has never yet gone unredeemed."

In the evening there was a great reception in the capitol building, and then Mr. Coolidge, with the happy assurance that he had made thousands of admiring friends among the Norse-Americans of the northwest, returned to Washington. Mrs. Coolidge and Secretary of State Kellogg were members of his party on the trip.

WILLIAM D. MITCHELL of St. Paul was sworn in as solicitor general of the United States last week, taking the place from which James M. Beck resigned. Mr. Mitchell was a law partner of Secretary Kellogg, and has been a strong supporter of President Coolidge.

CONSTITUTIONAL guarantees of free speech and freedom of the press do not carry the right to advocate unlawful acts for the overthrow of the government, according to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upholding the conviction of Benjamin Gitlow under the New York criminal anarchy law. He was convicted for publishing in the Revolutionary Age and advocating in speeches a manifesto issued by the left wing of the Socialist party, and was sentenced to hard labor for from five to ten years.

Justice Sanford, reading the opinion, said:

"It is a fundamental principle, long established, that the freedom of speech and of the press which is secured by the Constitution, does not confer an absolute right to speak or publish, without responsibility, whatever one may choose, or an unrestricted and unbridled license that gives immunity for every possible use of language and prevents the punishment of those who abuse this freedom. That a state in the exercise of its police power may punish those who abuse this freedom by utterances inimical to the public welfare, tending to corrupt public morals, incite to crime, or disturb the public peace, is not open to question."

Utterances advocating the overthrow of organized government by force, violence, and unlawful means, he declared, "present a sufficient danger of substantive evil to bring their punishment within the range of legislative discretion," and "the immediate danger is none the less real and substantial because the effect of a given utterance cannot be accurately foreseen."

Justices Holmes and Brandeis, in a dissenting opinion, held that the measure to be applied in each case was whether "the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that (the state) has a right to prevent."

PLANS for the great evolution trial in Dayton, Tenn., are nearing completion and scientists, educators, liberals and fundamentalists and the newspaper correspondents are preparing for the invasion of the little town. John T. Scopes, the defendant, has been in New York conferring with the leaders of the American Civil Liberties union, which has undertaken the general conduct of the defense. It was announced that the trial attorneys for Scopes would be Clarence Darrow, noted Chicago criminal lawyer; Bainbridge Colby, secretary of state in President Wilson's cabinet; Dr. John R. Neal of Knoxville, and Dudley Malone of New York, who volunteered his services. There was a report that Charles Evans Hughes, former secretary of state, would direct the defense or would be called on when the case reaches the Supreme court, as it is almost certain to do. There probably will be an advisory board of scientists and lawyers.

In a general way, the defense plans to endeavor to show first that there is no conflict between the theory of evolution as taught by science and the origin of man as taught in the Bible, and to show the struggle to obtain freedom of thought and teaching since the first days of scientific inquiry. Conviction of Scopes in the Dayton court is expected, but the forensic contest then and thereafter, with William Jennings Bryan leading the forces of the prosecution, is certain to be intensely interesting. And the ultimate result of the case is likely to be of vast importance, so the publicity that is being given the matter is really justifiable.

Incidentally, Mr. Bryan announces that after the Scopes case is disposed of he will retire to private life and devote his remaining years largely to the writing of his memoirs. He does not say whether or not he will cease his real estate activities in Florida.

NEGOTIATIONS between France and Spain have resulted in a plan of combined action against the Riffians in Morocco and extensive operations have opened with a movement by the Spaniards to seize the naval base of Alhucemas, held by the Moors. Thousands of troops and 130 airplanes were being gathered for this attack, and Abd-El-Krim was compelled to withdraw a great number of his best fighters from the French zone to defend the place. At the same time M. Painleve, French premier and foreign minister, flew to Morocco in a plane and personally inspected the disposition of the armies and the plans for action. Though the French policy has been to maintain a defensive campaign to keep the Riffians out of Fez and the French zone it was predicted this would be abandoned for a strong attack on Krim's troops. That leader took cognizance of Painleve's arrival by resuming the fighting along a sixty-mile front extending to the extreme east, threatening the railway from Algeria to Fez on which the French are dependent for immediate supplies and reinforcements.

ACCEPTING the suggestions of the American delegates, the International conference for the control of traffic in arms, in Geneva, has adopted a protocol prohibiting the use of chemicals and bacteria as weapons of war. Many military authorities ask why gas should be banned rather than shrapnel, high explosives and other more deadly weapons.

BELGIUM again won the Gordon Bennett balloon race cup, the pilot Veenstra in the balloon Prince Leopold having traveled from Brussels to Cape Tourian, Spain, a distance of 822 miles. The American balloon piloted by Van Orman was carried out over the ocean and landed on the deck of the ship Vaterland.

KING VICTOR EMMANUEL of Italy is determined to make peace between the Fascisti and their foes of the Aventine, and to the latter he has promised that he will end the present dictatorship and restore a fair parliamentary government in which they can participate. The king's personal popularity was demonstrated by the great enthusiasm with which the people celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ascension to the throne.

WHAT is called the greatest step toward Protestant unity since the time of Luther was taken last week when the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational churches of Canada were merged into one body known as the United Church of Canada. This comprises 8,771 congregations with about 2,500,000 adherents. The movement has been developing for some twenty years. The Baptists decided not to participate in the new organization.

THE American Students' Relief association, which since 1921 has been distributing aid to the old Russian men of learning whom the soviet government was allowing to starve, has been expelled from the country by the Moscow authorities. Its representatives were suavely informed that their visas had expired and would not be extended. Says one of them: "The only thing left for the old teachers in Russia is to die. Their condition is horrible, and there is no present prospect of relief. Some of them were permitted to retain their posts during the early years of the revolution, but most of them have now been replaced by young Communists who sport the title of professor, but who have a most superficial education."

CIVIL war in China has broken out again with continuous fighting between the Cantonese and the Yunnanese troops at Canton, in the course of which the American hospital and American launches have been hit by shells and bullets. The struggle probably will spread and the Russian Bolsheviks will find their opportunity to support the forces that seek to overthrow the government. In this they may come into direct conflict with Japan. Moscow openly asserts that it is the duty of the soviets to give aid to the Reds of the Oriental republic. The strikes fomented by them in the port cities are growing worse. The Peking government seems to be trying to steer a middle course, placating the radical students without directly antagonizing the foreign diplomats.

Ten or a dozen foreign gunboats are now at Canton. One, the Pampanga of the American navy, was fired on by Chinese troops and returned the fire. Our marines are protecting the American Christian college on Honan island, near Canton.

GREAT BRITAIN and France have reached agreement on the main points of a proposed security treaty, and there is renewed hope throughout Europe. According to an authoritative statement from London, Great Britain will abandon her policy of isolation and become virtually a member of a four power alliance—for it is assumed that Italy will join—to preserve the peace of Europe and guarantee the frontiers of France, Belgium, and Germany as established under the Versailles treaty against violation from any side, and will employ the whole of her defensive forces for this purpose.

The pact will be bilateral, Great Britain undertaking to guarantee the frontiers against unprovoked attack by either France or Germany. But there is an important proviso. The whole pact will be under the egis of the League of Nations, which Germany must join, and any action taken will be under the league covenant.

Though British reservations may hamper France in helping her allies in eastern Europe, the French could not afford to hold out because of this, for after all the territorial rights of those allies are guaranteed protection by the covenant of the League of Nations. There was a fear in England that some of the British dominions, especially Australia, might offer serious objection to pledging the empire's fighting forces in any continental contract which might tie them up in case of a sudden crisis in the Pacific.

Germany, while awaiting the detailed suggestion of a treaty by the allies, still contends that the only method of settling the whole matter satisfactorily is through a new international conference that would take up cojointly the questions of a security pact, evacuation of the Ruhr and the Cologne zone, disarmament, and Germany's entry into the league.

Claims to Have Been Libeled by Dossier

New York.—A secret dossier of the French government figures in the trial here of a $200,000 slander suit brought by Mrs. Marion McAllister Smith, formerly Meredes Leigh, the first actress to play Salome in the United States, against five defendants.

The dossier purported to identify Mrs. Smith as a notorious Duchess de Vallenda who was imprisoned in France in 1906 for embezzlement.

Mrs. Smith alleges that the defendants libeled her in circulating the report.

The defendants are Mme. Anne E. Guerin, former American representative of Madame Millerand, wife of the former French president; George N. Burleigh, an attorney; Barry N. Smith of the National Information bureau; Bronson Batchelor, Inc., a publicity agency, and Roger B. Jenkins, an officer of the corporation.

Mrs. Smith testified that as an official of the American-French league she originated the "poppy day" campaign of 1921 to raise $1,000,000 for French war orphans. There was a rift in the league, she said, and when she refused to join the defendants in another organization they circulated the malicious French government report. As a result President Harding withdrew his support of the poppy day campaign, she asserted.

Mrs. Smith said her efforts to obtain a retraction of the dossier from the American State department and the French ambassador at the time failed.

The balance of $1,460,000 covers other points throughout the state.

Saginaw—Nine houses and five other buildings were destroyed by fire which swept the village of Gagetown, 44 miles northeast of here, causing loss estimated at more than $45,000. Fanned by a high wind, the fire for a time threatened to destroy a much larger section of the village and was checked only by the combined efforts of the fire departments of five other towns that were called in to help.

Sault Ste. Marie—Freight totalling 11,210,090 tons passed through the Soo locks during May, against 9,872,821 tons during the same month last year, according to the report of L. C. Sabin, general superintendent of the canal. Vessel passages for May were 2,845, against 2,641 for May, 1924. The chief gain this year was in iron ore, of which 8,219,331 tons passed here last month, against 6,629,891 tons a year ago.

Romeo—Romeo was deprived of telephonic communication with the outside world when a building adjoining the telephone exchange collapsed, and was forced to use temporary toll and messenger service, it was announced by the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. Nine pay stations temporarily installed in a barber shop and a fleet of messengers comprised the service. The building was a three-story structure next to the site of a new bank building.

Lansing—Crop prospects throughout the state are decidedly unsatisfactory, according to a monthly report issued by Verne H. Church, federal agricultural statistician, and L. Whitney Watkins, state commissioner of agriculture. The month of May, the report states, was characterized by unusual extremes of weather, temperatures ranging from below freezing to above 90 degrees and the rainfall being the lightest on record. As a result crops suffered severely.

Pontiac—Sheriff Frank Schram, of Oakland county, has given his officers orders to arrest all persons found riding in automobiles on highways here while clad only in bathing suits of abbreviated style. This is in keeping with an ordinance passed by the board of supervisors a year ago, on complaints of several conutryside improvement associations. Bathing parties have made a practice of driving long distances to the lake beaches with no other clothing than swimming garb.

Grand Rapids—To provide means for a complete refinancing within a few months, reorganization of the Michigan Electric Railway is planned, B. C. Cobb, of New Yark, president of the company, announced while in the city as head of a bond holders' committee which is making a tour of the system. Detroit—Aerial freight, passenger and mail service between Detroit and Chicago, Cleveland and Dayton, will begin within two weeks, according to George Willens, who announced the organiaztion of Detroit Airways, Inc., and the purchase of five ships to be placed in immediate service. Preliminary plans call for a trip daily between Detroit and each of the cities named, and a bid for transportation of the mail by air, according to the terms of the Kelly bill, enabling the postmaster to let contracts for that work to private companies.

Pontiac—Local fishermen are unable to account for the deaths of large numbers of fish in Orchard Lake. For several days the fish have been washed upon the shores until it became necessary to remove them by the truck load. The sudden change of temperature from hot to cold is believed to have something to do with the wholesale killing of the fish. Last year several Oakland County Lakes lost quantities of fish following a sudden change in temperature. It first was believed that the fish were affected by disease but no trace was found.

Holland—Twenty-one Hope college girls were awarded sweaters and letters by Coach Schouten. To win a sweater girls must hike 20 miles a week, 10 hours indoor baseball, basketball and tennis, 12 hours setting up exercise and electives in volley ball, hockey, canoeing, rowing, skating and swimming.

Pontiac—Assistance of physicians throughout the county has been enlisted for the campaign the last week of June to raise $200,000 for financing the new proposed St. Joseph Mercy hospital. The Sisters of Mercy have to spend $150,000 here, and a site has been donated if the community raises another $150,000.

Lansing—Lansing needs enlarged postoffice facilities, Representative Grant M. Hudson, of the sixth congressional district, told postoffice department officials. He is undertaking to get approval of plans for an addition costing $40,000. The office now lacks lobby space, which will be provided if the proposal is accepted.

Menominee—A freight locomotive on the St. Paul Railroad started out without an engine crew recently and travelled 15 miles before it was found stalled near Bagley, Wis., after speeding through part of Menominee and the city of Marinette, Wis., at 30 miles an hour. Trainmen declared it stopped as mysteriously as it started.

Grand Rapids—Apiarists were summoned by Frank S. Elston, head of a storage and packing concern here, to discover a means of ridding his East Grand Rapids home of a swarm of bees which has taken possession and threaten to oust the Elston family. The village police department, after working for a few hours, gave up the job.

Detroit—The Detroit, Caro and Sandusky railway has petitioned the interstate commerce commission for permission to acquire a line of road extending 50 miles from Caro, Mich., to Roseburg, Mich., from the receivers of the Detroit, Bay City and Western railroad. The line was recently abandoned by the receivers of the Bay City.

Detroit—A municipally owned bridge connecting Windsor and Detroit will cost approximately $12,000,000, it was announced, following a meeting of the special committee appointed to deal with preliminary plans. According to members of the special committee, the proposal of the American-Canadian Transit company to build the bridge has not been favorably received.

Lansing—Dedication services for the Bethel Methodist church, one mile west of the city, were recently held with the Rev. C. O. Hoag, superintendent of the Lansing district in charge. Other Lansing pastors assisted. Church work in the district was started in a school house four years ago. Later the Methodists incorporated and a result just completed their $5,000 structure.

Grand Rapids—Mrs. Benjamin St. Clair, balloonist at Ramona Amusement Park here, owed her life and freedom from injury to her pluck and tenacity, and the agility of a member of her troupe. Unable to make her cries for assistance heard after her parachute had become entangled in the tops of a tall tree, the woman clung to an unsteady limb nearly an hour until discovered and rescued.

Lansing—The Lansing board of education operating under the new anti-fraternity bill will deprive students of their credits in event membership to secret societies is proven. Expulsion from school will be the final recourse taken by the board in the event of defiance by the high school pupils. State Senator Birney E. Brower, of Jackson, is preparing, on behalf of a Jackson high school fraternity, to test the constitutionality of the Turner Anti-Frat law.

Iron Mountain—After eight hours of battling with flames raging in log and chemical plant wood piles one half mile west of the Ford Motor company's plant here, men directing the fire fighting forces believed that, with the change in the direction of the wind, they had the flames under control. The combined efforts of several hundred men and fire fighting apparatus from this city, Menominee, Escanaba and Crystal Falls and the Ford plant were needed to fight the fire.

Ann Arbor—After a half-day search by state troopers and representatives of the sheriff's office of both Washtenaw and Jackson counties, the armed posse, which had been scouring the two counties in search of Frank Smith, colored, escaped convict and "bad man," renewed their search, after a report that a Negro following Smith's description had been seen near Jackson. Smith, who was sentenced to from three to 10 years for assault, escaped from William Gore, a policeman, who was taking him to Jackson prison.

Port Huron—James McCoy, a 13-year-old boy of Harbor Beach, is supposed to have been drowned after he was put into a life preserver and thrown from a sinking rowboat by his father, John McCoy, in the hope of saving his life. The family had gone for a day's fishing on the lake when the boat began to fill with water. John McCoy and his two other children were taken to shore by the Coast Guards and the rescue ship returned to the station before it was discovered that James had not drifted ashore as was expected.

Death of Professor C. H. Gurney

Friends here will much regret to learn of the death of one who was so well known and had so many pleasant associations in our midst, Prof. Charles H. Gurney at Los Angeles, California, near his daughter Mrs. Homer Lash. Prof. Gurney went to California about 1913 where he has since resided. He is survived by his wife, two daughters Mrs. Lash and Mrs. Cleve. Westcott of Jerome (nee Ruth Gurney) It is reported that the venerable educator had been in poor health for a number of years and partially blind the last years of his life. We like to designate him as the "grand old man" of Hillsdale College where he spent so many years of his long useful life, coming as he did to the institution when it needed an uplift and devoting twenty two years of time to its moulding. For two years after the retiring of its president, he acted as Dean of the College, and his range of teaching was varied. It would unnecessary to speak of his activities while in this country—they were numerous and fruitful. First of all—it might be said he was a man of the common people; the only aristocracy he believed in was the aristocracy of brains, and many a young man and woman who sought education and advice, found in Professor Gurney a true friend and counselor. At times he found it necessary to place rigid discipline on the student personnel, and of course, this produced some friction, but his wonderful upstanding manhood and single honesty of purpose overcame all criticisms. During his incumbency at the College he was much among the people of North Adams; he had a hand in shaping the destinies of our best young people, many of whom have since gone out in the world in their many chosen professions and can rise up and call him blessed. Not only in teaching but in writing Professor Gurney achieved statewide reputation. He was the author of a text book which is today used universally in the schools of Iowa also in other states.

Mr. Gurney was born in Stanfordville, N. Y., July 17, 1847, and entered Hillsdale College as a student in 1868, graduating in 1873. He went to Iowa and there passed many years as superintendent of different high schools, being in educational work altogether for 48 years. Quite dissimilar from most College professors he was an all round citizen and found time to mingle in city affairs and government being at one time alderman in Hillsdale. As a true speciman of all-round personality he excelled. He had no narrow ideas which come from a long confinement to sectarian pedagogy.

He had no pessimism yellowed and musty from book-lore as we are wont to believe always accompanies long years of professorship along a single line. It can truthfully be said of Professor Gurney "he was quite sufficient unto the day in which he lived, and his glory is written in the Lamb's Book of Life" where centuries cannot blot it out. Would that there were many more of his kind.

110,502 More Dairy Cows Needed In Michigan By 1930

One hundred and ten thousan five hundred and two more dairy cows will be needed in Michigan by 1930, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. This number will be required to take care of the normal needs of the state's growing population unless Michigan farmers adopt the double barrelled policy of breeding only from pure-bred sires and then feeding their progeny balanced rations.

An average cow produces about four thousand pounds of milk a year containing 160 pounds of butterfat, the Institute states, or just about enough to meet the requirements of a family of four with milk, butter, cheese, ice cream and condensed milk. A daughter of a high production sire, fed in accordance with the methods advocated by the state agricultural college, will produce around six thousand pounds, and her offspring under the same conditions in turn should not find it impossible to bring her production to the eight thousand pound mark per year.

Should Michigan farmers adopt the advanced practices outlined above, only about half of the 110,502 cows would be needed to supply the state's dairy products needs five years from now, says the Institute, basing its conclusions on figures from hundreds of cow test association reports. Not only would the smaller number of quality cows make twice as much clear profit per cow above feed costs, but their owners would still have a ten dollar gold piece per cow over for good measure.

"Pushed Pig" Most Profitable Says Ervard

Not only is it advisable to push pigs on pasture, but it is the one plan that has been found to be most profitable to the farmer.

Prof. John M. Ervard, swine expert, gave this statement to his class in a lecture before the Radio Farm School of the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. And Prof. Ervard ought to know. For fifteen years now he has been in charge of the experimental work with live stock at Jowa State College. Furthermore he gave the data upon which he based his conclusions.

"Spring pigs may either take the short route to the pork barrel by hitting the market from September to early December, or they may take the long route marketward by getting there around Christmas time or as late as next fall", Prof. Ervard said. If pigs of this spring's farrow go to market in the fall of 1926, they will be practically a year and a half old and classed as heavies. Inasmuch as heavies do not usually sell well as compared to light hogs in the fall of the year, there is not only a discount in price but in addition we have the excessive overhead costs as well as surplus charges. It would seem therefore that pigs should be pushed for all they are worth until on the way to market in the first two late months of fall.

Skimping on pasture is a costly error, as we have found out in our experiments. Pigs on alfalfa receiving a limited ration during the grazing season and which were full fed after the pasture season closed took 192 days to get to the 225 pound weight. Self-fed pigs, however, reached the same weight in 146 days. The limited fed pigs took 402 pounds of concentrates per hundred pounds of gain, 21 pounds of which was tankage, whereas the self fed ones took only 394 pounds. The self fed pigs, too required only 13 pounds of tankage for the hundred pounds of gain,

A Brave Amazon

Near West Point, overlooking the Hudson, is the grave of Capt. Margeret Corbin of the field Artillery of the Continental army, who is said to have been the first woman to fight in battle in the Revolution. For a long time due to the nickname "Molly" Mrs. Corbin's identity was confused with that of Molly Pitcher who served a gun at Monmouth in 1778 when the husband, John Hayes, fell, using her apron and skirts for wadding. For a loug time her grave in the Hudson valley was believed to be that of Molly Pitcher.

In defense of the fortifications of Washington Heights, Mrs. Corbin and her husband, John, worked a gun together, the wife swabbing and ramming, the husband aiming and handling the breech vent and firing fuses. Corbin fell dead at his wife's feet. She called a soldier to do what she had been doing and stepped behind the gun and poured an avenging continuous fire into the ranks of the advancing Hessians, until she fell with a grape-shot wound she believed to be mortal. When the regiment was mustered out Margaret Corbin was commissioned a captain of artillery. The United States had granted her a half pay and the state of Pennsylvania had presented her with a gold hilted sword.

Her only friends were the soldiers with whom she and her husband had served. The regiment had been disbanded on the Hudson river aud she went to the neighborhood of West Point where she died in 1802.

The condition of the hay and all other crops is not so bad as was at first feared. It is always so in Michigan. Tha drought breaks.

WHEN SIGNALS ARE SET AGAINST YOU

Danger Signs Given by Bankers—People With Money to Invest Warned Against Ways to Lose It—The Lure of "Easy Money."

If you were an engineer on a railroad you would not intentionally pass safety signals set against you. To the experienced investor there are similar signals for safeguarding his investments. Some of these signs of danger, issued by the Public Service Committee of the State Bank Division, American Bankers Association, in conjunction with the Better Business Bureau, are briefly indicated here.

BIG RETURNS—It is easy to promise an abnormally high rate of dividends, or large market profits, to prospective investors. Heavy risks usually accompany such lures. They are too often the chief talking points of financial charlatans.

PROMINENT NAMES — Promoters know that the names and endorsements of successful men carry weight. They are often used without authorization. The prudent investor will look beyond names and will investigate.

THE "GROUND FLOOR"—An opportunity to "get in on the ground floor" often turns out to be the same sort of opportunity which the proverbial spider extended to the fly.

INSIDE INFORMATION—"Inside tips" are usually expensive pieces of misinformation. When used as "confidential information" to influence the small investor they are generally of spurious character.

THE FICTITIOUS ADVANCE—Professional promoters often arbitrarily advance the prices of the shares they sell as their campaigns gain headway to create buying excitement and induce new buyers to get in before the next rise. Such price advances are artificial, usually employed merely to "speed up" the unloading of shares.

THE TELEPHONE CANVASS — Irresponsible vendors find it easy to work over the telephone to victimize incautious investors. The cautious investor will not enter into securities transactions by telephone unless he personally knows with whom he is dealing.

THE UNSELFISH PROMOTER — The promoter who "gives his services" in organizing a company or as an officer of it and advertises that he does so, will bear watching.

THE IRRESPONSIBLE GUARANTEE—Irresponsible sellers of securities often "guarantee" certain profits, or even that they will buy back shares when the purchaser wants his money. Promises of this nature are made to create confidence and to lull suspicion. They should indicate to the prospective purchaser a special need to investigate.

"REORGANIZATION" AND MERGER — Unsuccessful companies forced into "reorganization" often call upon stockholders for new funds. Response to such appeals often means merely throwing good money after bad. A conspicuously fraudulent device has been the "merger," by which a new company trading upon fresh prospects and promises, takes over the assets of an unsuccessful venture and issues new stock for old, provided the shareholder pays 25 per cent or so in cash.

THE PARTIAL-PAYMENT PLAN—This helpful method of selling securities has been much abused. People who prefer to buy securities out of their weekly or monthly earnings, are sometimes victimized by vendors of stocks which have little or no value. All honest securities dealers unite in warning the investor to buy on the partial-payment plan only after making sure of the financial responsibility and standing of the firm with which he does business.

THE APPEAL TO PREJUDICE—A chief stock in trade of the unreliable promoter is misinformation which plays upon the prejudices and emotions of prospects. This style of promoter points out supposed "evils" and "special privileges" existing in the world of "high finance." He may urge that his venture is a poor man's proposition, free from the "large underwriting profits which the big fellows get." Usually such sellers endeavor to throw suspicion on others to divert it from themselves.

FALSE SENSE OF SECURITY—"Real estate—the safest security on earth," is the type of slogan under which at times unscrupulous operators endeavor to unload property on persons who want to make an investment, but not a poor speculation. Experienced opinion, supported by impartially-gathered facts, forms the only basis upon which to buy real estate, especially when you cannot see it before you buy.

MINING FALLACIES — Many mining ventures are honest but fail because the promoters are unable to finance the proposition through to a successful conclusion. Many other mining promotions are not good prospects although they may be represented as such. If a small investor wishes to buy mining stocks he can do so by purchasing securities of established mining companies with records of substantial earnings and of dividends regularly paid to stockholders.

OIL RISKS—To almost every one come opportunities to speculate in oil schemes. Very often such offerings are misrepresented. Usually they are sheer speculations, all the risks being taken with the stockholders' money, while the promoters pay themselves handsomely through stock sales, commissions, salaries or "organization expenses." The investor who desires to buy mining or oil securities should get facts and experienced opinion as to issues of established, successful oil companies. Even the legitimate mining or oil business is speculative and depends for profits upon a sound combination of properties, organization, finances and management.

INVENTION DELUSIONS—The general public too often believes that large profits are to be gained through patented processes or devices. Inventions are a fascinating means for separating inexperienced investors from their savings. Even when practical from a marketing and manufacturing standpoint, patents are usually only moderately valuable. The small investor cannot afford to take an "Invention Chance" with his funds.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON THE SOUND OF WORDS

"Aunt Emmy," said Helen, handing her a letter, "I want you to tell me what you think of this as an investment for that money I have in the bank." Aunt Emmy adjusted her spectacles and read the letter carefully.

"I see," she remarked, "that you are offered debenture bonds in the Blank Manufacturing Corporation——"

"Yes!" cried Helen, interrupting her. "That's what makes me think so well of it. A debenture bond must be so safe!"

"Why do you say that?" inquired Aunt Emmy. "What, exactly, is a debenture bond?"

Helen hesitated while Aunt Emmy looked at her with a twinkle in her eyes. Then she stammered something about security.

"Now, child," admonished Aunt Emmy, "don't get flustered. It's very simple. When you buy a bond, whatever it is called, you loan your money to the company putting out the bonds. The word debenture comes from the Latin word 'debeo,' which means, as you should know if you remember your schooling, 'I owe.' Now, then, if you lend someone money, you would expect security unless the character of the borrower was so high that you would feel safe merely in holding his I. O. U. In the case of a debenture bond you are loaning money on a company's I. O. U. The company offering you debenture bonds does not pledge or mortgage any property to secure the bonds.

"If the company is in good standing, has a high credit rating and is making money, a debenture bond is a good investment. If the company is weak a debenture bond is a risky thing to buy. It all depends on the soundness of the company and not on the sound of the word 'debenture.' As for the company described in this letter, I don't know anything about it, do you?"

"No," admitted Helen reluctantly, "I do not know a thing. After what you have told me I wish I did. How do you suppose I can find out who and what they are?"

"There is nothing easier than that," rejoined her aunt. "All you have to do is to go down to the bank and ask them to give you a report on the Blank Manufacturing Corporation. They will be glad to look into this for you and will give you some really good advice if you want to invest your money in something safe. Never hesitate about talking to your banker about your financial affairs. He is willing to help you at any time."

BANKERS HELP

Pierce County Bankers Association, Wisconsin, have sent a boy and a girl to the week's Short Course at the University of Wisconsin, all the banks sharing in the expense. The Association is active in boys' and girls' club work.

Eaton County, Michigan, bankers sponsored an enthusiastic dairy-alfalfa meeting at Charlotte. As a direct result of the last campaign, 2,000 acres of alfalfa have been added. A county-wide bovine tuberculosis eradication campaign is being conducted with every assurance that the county will be on the accredited list this fall. Three cow testing associations have been organized.

Richland County Bankers Association, North Dakota, is one of the county associations which has organized to carry out the work of the boys' and girls' clubs and the "alfalfa on every farm" project. This program was adopted at a State banker-farmer meeting at Fargo in February.

Ten Reasons Why The Woman's Christian Temperance Union Should Carry On

1. Its work is not done. The conflict for law enforcement may be as long and bitter as for constitutional prohibition. Every local union is a center through which sentiment for law enforcement is made.

2. It is adaptable to the needs of city and country alike and to every nation. Its manysided activities commend it to people of varied interests.

3. It is a training school in reform methods and it has the machinery to promote such reforms.

4. It is a law observance organization. Every member is pledged to obey the law, and because of this basic fact it lays foundations for obedience to all laws.

5. It is a promoter of good legislation and good principles. It emphasize the importance of the use and the right use of the ballot.

6. It is needed to meet the attacks of our organized enemy, and through its official organ to broadcast information throughout the world about the benefits of prohibition.

7. It encourages and helps the women of other nations to do for their country what the W. C. T. U. has done for American women.

8. It is an organization of women of all church affiliations; as such it promotes Christian fellowship and is needed in every community

9. The form of organization is ideal, binding together the women in local, county, state, National and World units. It has been built up at great expense of time and energy and with a sacrificial spirit. It is still needed.

10. It is Christian in origin, evangelistic in spirit, educational in character and an organizized movement for protection to the home.

PROHIBITION WILL WIN

To win will mean a long drawn out battle. To win we must hold high our standard. The future of prohibition in the world depends upon the success of our great social experiment in America. We know not in what form or where we must meet our opponents. Instead of yielding to their demands we answer by calling upon all patriotic citizens to obey the law and upon officials to do their duty in enforcing the law.

It may be necessary to change some social customs to do this, but social customs can be changed It may be necessasy to perfect our laws. It may be necessary to secure better enforcement officials. It will be necessary to change the public attitude on the whole question, but it must be done, and what must be done, can be done, and by the grace of God, the W. C. T. U. will help to do it. Will you join?

"Twentieth Century Limited"

With the departure today of its several sections from New York and Chicago, west and eastbound, the New York Central's famous fast long distance train de luxe, the "Twentieth Century Limited" observed its twenty third birthday and entered into its twenty fourth year of service in providing a notable and historic passenger express service between the two largest cities of the country.

The first "Centuries" made their maiden trips on June 15, 1902, two decades and three years ago. Statistics compiled by the railroad company show that in this period this famous train has carried over eleven million passengars, or a number approximately one-tenth the entire population of the United States, and which would represent the entire total population of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, St. Louis, Boston and Buffalo Considered as one train, the "Century" has made a total of 16,790 trips in these 23 years and has covered a distance equivalent to 16,118,400 miles. This mileage is equivalent to the "Century" having made up to the present 648 round trips around the earth at the equator and of covering more than 33 round trips between the earth and the moon, which lie 238,840 miles apart.

The "Century's" twenty third birthday today was quietly observed by the New York Central Lines management. All sections of the train, both east and westbound, carried suitable floral decorations in the club, dining and observation cars in honor of the event. Souvenir cards announcing the train's birthday were distributed to passengers in the dining cars of the various sections.

Plan Big Campaign For Marl Digging

Economical methods of digging marl, sometimes referred to as the farmers "white gold", will be demonstrated this summer through many counties of the state by a team of extension specialists from the M. S. C.

The exact itinerary for the marl demonstration team has not yet been definitely set, but it is said that requests have already been received from more than 25 counties for the work. The truck train of marl extracting machinery will probably be on the road most of the summer

Sixty percent of the soil of Michigan needs lime for profitable alfalfa growing, says Larry Livingston, extension specialist with the college agricultural engineering department. Almost half of the area can be supplied with marl more economically than it can with limestone, and one and one half yards of marl which tests 85 percent will do the work of one ton of the best grade of ground limestone

Thirty eight requests have already been made for marl digging demonstrations this year. The college is making every effort to fill all requests. The schedule will start about July first, although it is not definitely made up as yet. Each demonstration will cover four days and will include a complete marl excavating equipment moving on trucks. It is estimated that this outfit will remove from its bed 150 yards of marl at each stop.

Nearly 300 students will be granted degrees from the M. S. C. on Monday, June 22, on the occasion of the sixty seventh annual commencement exercises at the stage college. Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois, will deliver the commencement address to the graduating class, which will be the first to receive degrees under the administration of Dr. K. L Butterfield as president of the college. Divisions represented in the graduating class are agriculture, engineering, home economics, veterinary medicine, liberal arts and applied science.

Interest in the Shadukiam Grotto fourth annual Awakening is becoming statewide, according to information received from branches of the Masonic Order in practically all parts of the state, and it is expected that fully 40,000 people from without the city limits of Detroit will attend the showing of "Cleopatra" at the Michigan State Fair grounds, June 27 July 11. Participation in the big annual night show of Grotto will not be limited to Detroiters, according to the show directors, who state that cast members will be secured from other sections of the state. Some of the cities which will come the strongest in numbers to the event will include Jackson, Flint, Ann Arbor, Port Huron and Pontiac. Special patriotic programs of fireworks will be given the nights of July 4th and 5th as added features to the regular fireworks win lup of the big spectacle.

Ontario Is Still Wet

Our neighbors over in King George's domains are still unable to get very far away from old John Barleycorn and the Province of Ontario recently passed the law permitting beer to be sold. The result is that there is a wonderful exodus to Windsor and neighboring villages from the American side of the river. Newspapers throughout the state especially the large Detroit dailies made great scare-heads of this item, advertising it far and wide. Sundays have since the passage of the new law been nothing but sodden debaucheries across the river. While the British nation as a rule is undeniably and hopelessly wet there seems to be a real dry element in Canada which desires better things, but that element in Ontario is as yet in a minority.

It is reported that while a short time ago the highways of our neighboring Canada province were comparatively safe for driving, now they are not. This means that the average American family man who was wont to go across with his car and his family for a Sunday afternoon, will no longer care to take the risk. It is too bad that the American-Canadian governments cannot get busy and form an amalgamation which would result in shutting out liquor entirely on the border states of the Dominion. Our sole troubles of late have been watching these Canadian rum runners and literal millions of tax payers hard earned dollars have gone to establish a patrol on the border land, but results have been far from satisfactory. In a recent paper we read that a certain rum runner who became notorious, but w o a while back decided the risk was too great, and he would quit altogether, had gone into the business again. As long as there is an open saloon at our back door so to speak, we have little to expect of prohibition as far as Detroit or neighboring territory is concerned. Rum running on the Detroit River has become one of the notorious crimes of the world, and excited the ridicule of a nation—all because we cannot bring Canadians to believe liquor is bad. True to their ancestry way back in "Merrie old England" these jovial people will not let go of their love for bacchanalian indulgence. Centuries ago the old English Squire indulged his appetite in ale and heavy beers and no household was considered up-to-date without its decanter of liquors on the side board. All this has come down through generations to our Canadian cousins—a fact which is deplorable when we consider the sturdy true blue character of the inhabitents of Ontario.

"LADY NORHEYS!"

SYNOPSIS. — In London the teller of the story of the adventures of "King Tommy," and known hereafter as "Uncle Bill," is informed by Lord Norheys, son of an old friend, that Lord Troyte, head of the British foreign office, Norheys' uncle, has a scheme to make him (Norheys) king of Lystria, in central Europe, through marriage to Calypso, daughter of King Wladislaws, deposed monarch of that country. A financier, Procopius Cable, knows there is oil in profusion in Lystria, and with an English king on the throne the output could be secured for England. Norheys, in love with a stage dancer, Viola Temple, is not enthusiastic over the proposition. The patriarch, Menelaus, highest ecclesiastical dignitary in Lystria, is heartily in favor of the restoration of the monarchy, and Cable has generously financed the sentiment. Calypso is making a living dancing in the "Mascotte," Berlin cabaret. Norheys refuses to entertain the idea of giving up Viola Temple, to whom he is secretly engaged. "Uncle Bill's" sister Emily urges him to secure a passport from Lord Troyte for a certain Janet Church, strongminded female who wants to visit Lystria in the interests of a society for world peace. Janet Church leaves for Berlin. "Uncle Bill" is again appealed to by his sister to find a certain curate (name not given) who has left his parish in Ireland for a visit to Berlin, and cannot be found. Lord Norheys and Viola Temple disappear from London.

It occurred to me at once that Norheys, goaded to exasperation by Cable's conduct to Miss Temple, had gone off with her and got married somewhere.

"Did you," I asked, "find out whether Miss Temple is in London or not?"

"No, I didn't. You surely don't think he's gone off with her?"

I went over to the telephone and rang up the Belvedere theater. I asked whether Miss Temple was there and at what hour she might be expected to dance. Someone who was either in a hurry or a bad temper replied that Miss Temple was unable to dance owing to indisposition. He added that if I had taken the trouble to look at the advertisements of his entertainment I should have seen that Miss Temple had not danced for two nights. In that way, so he said quite plainly, I should have avoided wasting his time with silly questions. That was a plain hint to me to ring off and hang up the receiver; but I ventured on another question.

"Do you happen to know if Miss Temple is at home in her flat?"

"No, I don't," came the reply, "and I shouldn't tell you if I did. We don't encourage strangers to run after our ladies."

I told Troyte what I had heard.

"I suppose," I said, "that putting two and two together in the usual way we arrive at four."

"You mean that he's gone off with her?"

"I should have expressed myself more plainly," I said. "I should have said that putting one and one together we arrive at another one. 'They twain,' you know."

"Married?"

"He told me he was perfectly determined to marry her, and I expect he was."

My opinion was that Troyte had driven the boy into marrying rather sooner than he meant to by continuously pushing the Princess Calypso at him and worrying him about the crown of Lystria. Cable, with his attempt at bribery and his ill-timed threats, had settled the matter. But there was no use making things worse for Troyte by telling him that it was largely his own fault. I tried to soften the blow to him.

"I'm told," I said, "that she's a nice, lady-like girl. He might have done worse."

Troyte sat sipping a glass of cognac without speaking. I went on:

"And, after all, it wouldn't have been all joy marrying a Balkan princess. I don't know this Calypso girl personally, but I can't help feeling that a young woman brought up among bearded brigands, with snowy mountains all round, and heavy barbaric jewels given her for birthday presents, might turn out to be what the French call farouche. I don't meant to hint that she isn't a lady; but she may be a bit lacking in serenity."

"I don't believe he's gone off with Miss Temple," said Troyte.

The thing seemed so obvious to me that I could see no reason for doubting it. But the next thing Troyte said startled me.

"The fact is," he said, "that Norheys promised me three days ago that he'd go out to Lystria. He said he'd be ready to start tomorrow."

"Did he say he'd marry the princess?"

"No. He didn't. If you want his exact words, he said, 'I'll have a go at that jolly old crown, Uncle Ned, just to please you.'"

I have never known Norheys go back on his word. If he said that he certainly meant to do it.

"And he promised to start tomorrow?" I said.

"Yes. But he may have changed his mind and started the day before yesterday. I told him that everything was ready. As a matter of fact, Cable has had an agent from Lystria waiting in Berlin for a week, ready to make a dart across the frontier the very moment Norheys arrives. Every one in Lystria is prepared for the coup d'etat. The patriarch and most of the leading nobles are to be in the Schloss Amberg, one of the old royal palaces. Cable has poured money into the country and has got the whole thing thoroughly organized. In fact, he told me that he'd managed to bribe the President of the Megalian republic and three of his cabinet ministers, so that they won't make a fuss when Lystria declares its independence. I've settled things with the French, more or less, that is to say, they've agreed to leave it to the League of Nations."

"Which means?"

Troyte smiled slightly.

"Talk," he said, "and time."

"So you really think that if Norheys has gone there—"

"Everything will go quite smoothly," said Troyte. "But I wish he'd told me he was starting at once."

"And it might have been better," I said, "if he hadn't taken Miss Temple with him."

"I don't believe he's done that," said Troyte. "Hang it all, the boy's a gentleman. He wouldn't go off to marry the princess with that other woman in attendance."

I felt as sure as I could be about anything that Norheys had not gone off to marry the princess. But he might possibly have gone to Lystria to see if he could secure the crown without the princess. He told me he was anxious to please his uncle and to supply the empire with oil.

"What would happen," I said, "if he asked for the crown and refused to marry the princess?"

"He wouldn't get it," said Troyte. "The Lystrians are legitimists to the backbone."

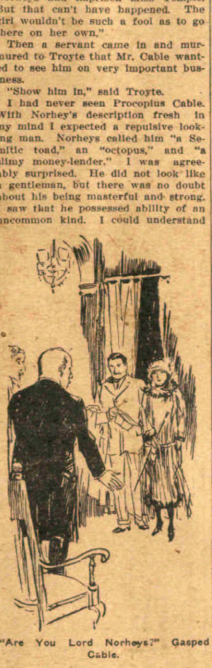
"And if by any chance—I'm not saying that it is so, I'm only making a suggestion—if by any chance Miss Temple followed him there of her own accord, what would happen?"

"I should think," said Troyte, "that the patriarch would probably hang Norheys and imprison Miss Temple. But that can't have happened. The girl wouldn't be such a fool as to go there on her own."

Then a servant came in and murmured to Troyte that Mr. Cable wanted to see him on very important business.

"Show him in," said Troyte.

I had never seen Procopius Cable. With Norhey's description fresh in my mind I expected a repulsive looking man. Norheys called him "a Semitic toad," an "octopus," and "a slimy money-lender." I was agreeably surprised. He did not look like a gentleman, but there was no doubt about his being masterful and strong. I saw that he possessed ability of an uncommon kind. I could understand how it was that Troyte believed him to be an empire-builder. Clive and Warren Hastings, in earlier days Drake and Frobisher, later on perhaps Cecil Rhodes, must have been men of essentially the same sort of character. But looking at the man, it was tolerably certain that he was not by birth an Englishman. He had become English because England is the natural home of men of his type, the only country which has ever understood how to use them. But the foreign strain was unmistakable. It was not Semitic. It was not Latin. I do not think it was Slav. It was something that made him more excitable and more liable to display excitement than a man of our blood would be.



"Are You Lord Norheys?" Gasped Cable.

His eyes were sparkling. His face seemed to shine and his movements were jumpy when he walked into the room. When he saw me he stopped, half way between the door and the fireplace.

Troyte introduced me formally, told him that he need not hesitate to speak in my presence and invited him to sit down. Cable still looked at me doubtfully. Troyte explained that I was Norheys' godfather and knew all about the Lystrian business. Then Cable blurted out the news.

"I came round to tell you," he said, "that I've just had a telegram from Casimir. You recollect, don't you, Count Istvan Casimir is the most influential of the Lystrian nobles. He's my agent in Berlin."

"Yes," said Troyte. "He was to receive Norheys there."

"Everything has gone capitally so far," said Cable. "Lord Norheys arrived in Berlin. Casimir met him. They crossed the Megalian frontier today."

"Today?" said Troyte. "Norheys and Casimir?"

"Lord Norheys and the princess," said Cable. "Casimir couldn't go with them. He wouldn't have been allowed to cross the frontier. The patriarch is waiting for them in the Schloss Amberg. They ought to arrive there tomorrow evening. Next morning the wedding will be celebrated in the Royal chapel. Tomorrow afternoon the coronation will take place."

Cable was excited, wildly excited. He stepped forward, took Troyte's liqueur glass, filled it with cognac and raised it high above his head.

"God save the king of Lystria," he said.

He swallowed the cognac, and, following the best precedents, threw down the glass. It ought no doubt to have emphasized the toast by being shivered to atoms. But Troyte's Persian carpet is soft. The glass merely rolled about a little. I picked it up quite unharmed and set it on the tray.

"I suppose," I said, "that there's no possibility of a mistake about your news?"

"There can't be a mistake," said Cable. "Casimir is thoroughly reliable. The telegram is in my private code, so you couldn't read it if I showed it to you. But you may take my word for it that it comes from Casimir. No one else has the code."

"I don't see any reason to suppose there is a mistake," said Troyte. "Norheys told me he meant to go to Lystria, though I didn't know he meant to start day before yesterday."

"He started a week ago," said Cable.

That puzzled me. I was quite certain that I had seen Norheys less than a week ago. Certainly Miss Temple was dancing in the Belvedere four days before. I saw her there myself. Whatever Norheys had done, she had certainly not left London a week ago.

"Does your telegram say whether there was any one else with Norheys and the princess?" I said. "You've told us that the Count Casimir couldn't go with them. Did they go off to Lystria alone?"

"There was a lady with the princess," said Cable.

"Who?" I asked.

"I don't know," said Cable.

"Some lady-in-waiting, of course," said Troyte. I was more puzzled than ever. I felt convinced that Miss Temple was with Norheys wherever he was. Unless he had succeeded in working out his plan for marrying both of them I failed to see what could have happened.

"I think," said Troyte, "that we ought to follow Mr. Cable's example, and drink the health of the king and queen of Lystria."

He rang the bell. In a few minutes we had a bottle of champagne on the table between us. Troyte filled three glasses. He and I stood up. Cable had not sat down.

"Long life to the king and queen," said Troyte.

"The restored monarchy of Lystria," said Cable.

"Oil," I said, "and plenty of it."

Troyte drank. Cable hesitated, looking doubtfully at me. He suspected that I might be poking fun at him, and that kind of man always hates a joke. I held up my glass and smiled amiably.

Then—things occasionally happen in this dramatic way even in real life—Norheys and Viola Temple walked in.

"Hullo! Uncle Ned," said Norheys, "just ran round, don't you know, to tell you that Viola and I were married the day before yesterday. Did the trick in Dover and ran over to Paris for twenty-four hours. Excuse our not being dressed and that sort of thing. The train's only just in."

Troyte stared at him. So did Cable. Neither of them spoke. I felt it was my duty to break a silence that was becoming awkward.

"Oddly enough," I said, "we were just drinking to your health when you came in."

"Were you?" said Norheys. "Now how the devil did you know? I suppose it got into the papers somehow. What I always say is: It's no use trying to keep things out of papers. 'The marquis of Norheys and his beautiful bride leaving the church after the ceremony, and all that sort of thing. What? With a photograph of some other fellow and quite a different girl grinning at you. I don't know how it's done; but there it is, you know. Anyhow, I'm glad it was broken to you, Uncle Ned. I was afraid it might be a bit of a facer at first. Not that I'm going to back out of Lystria. I always told you I was quite on for that. So's Viola. Viola is as keen as I am and we'll start tomorrow if you like."

"Are you Lord Norheys?" gasped Cable.

"That exact man, and this is Lady Norheys."

"If you're Lord Norheys—" said Cable.

"I don't blame you for not recognizing me," said Norheys. "I expect the photographs you saw in the papers gave me a long white beard or something. But I'm the man, the actual and only original. Do tell him who I am, Uncle Bill. He doesn't seem to believe me."

"If you're Lord Norheys, some one else must have gone off to Lystria with the princess."

"Good old Calypso," said Norheys. "Done a bolt on her own, I suppose. Family chauffeur, perhaps. What I always say is this: If a girl has any spirit it's a mistake to drive her up against the ropes, telling her she's got to marry some fellow she's never seen. They won't stand it, and I don't altogether blame them. Jolly independent, all of them, specially since the war."

"If you're Lord Norheys," Cable said, "who has gone off to Lystria with the princess?"

He spoke in a dull flat tone. Troyte made no attempt to answer him. Norheys put his arm round his wife's waist and winked vulgarly at me. There was a long and embarrassing silence. I broke it in the end with an idiotic answer to Cable's question.

"Unless it's my sister Emily's lost curate, I don't see who it can be." Then I giggled nervously.

Well, well! If this Lord Norheys has married Viola Temple, who's the other Lord Norheys?

The Way of the Sex

Mother—What's this I see on your card, Stella, you've been talking again during school hours.

Stella—Yes, mamma, that's the way with us women, we can't be any different, it seems.

POULTRY

RAISING GEESE IS QUITE PROFITABLE

During the past year I have been raising geese and I have found them to be profitable. There is a good market for geese.

In the first place geese require less grain than any other fowl. That is important. The geese derive a greater part of their living from pasture and roaming about, and they get just what they require in the way of feed. In winter it's different. We must feed them, but they do not eat like other fowls; and I have found they will fatten more quickly than other fowls, says a writer in the Indiana Farmer's Guide. The important thing that I do not want overlooked is the fact that the goslings are the easiest of all fowls to raise. That has been my experience of many years past, perhaps ten years or longer. Once they are hatched out, with ordinary care, they will thrive and grow with rapidity to maturity. The thing that is hardest is to get them hatched. I have found so many eggs that were infertile, so I always set plenty of them.

The little goslings will seldom touch feed other than bits of grass until after three or four days. One thing is essential, and that is having plenty of drinking water. They must have this, and require it, for that seems to be their very nature.

The hen and goslings are kept in their coop, where it is warm for the first week. Sometimes I keep them in ten days when it is damp and cold. After that they are allowed all the free range they want, except on rainy days.

The first feed I give the goslings is hard-boiled eggs mixed with milk and cornmeal. That is the best thing in the way of feed that I have ever tried. The milk must be sweet for best results. The eggs may be crushed up, shell and all, and mixed with the milk and cornmeal.

The first month the goslings are fed about four times a day. I have always done this, for while young and growing they require nourishment often, although sparingly fed each time. It is folly to overfeed and it is also injurious.

The breeding birds are fed carefully during winter. I give them clover, vegetables and sprouted oats, so they do not get too fat.

Young Turkeys Require Shelter in Wet Weather

Young turkeys are susceptible to wet weather. One precaution that must always be observed in handling the young poults is to see that they have a dry place where they are protected from the rainstorms, and that they have a dry place to roost.

Turkey hens will lay when a year old if they are well matured. It is probably best to keep the majority of the flock older hens, but it is necessary to keep some of the better young hens to gradually replace the older hens. In this way the flock can be kept in the best of condition.

In feeding and caring for young poults there are as many different rations and methods advocated as there are for chicks.

No food should be given to the young poults for the first 36 to 48 hours. During the first week hard-boiled infertile eggs chopped fine and mixed with equal parts of rolled oats and fed in limited quantities three times a day is a satisfactory ration. Sour skimmed milk or buttermilk is excellent for drinking purposes. After the third or fourth day cracked corn, hulled or steel-cut oats, cracked wheat or other similar grains may be scattered in the light litter or in the short grass outside of the brood coop in order to encourage the poults to exercise in getting their food.

June Is the Best Time to Caponize Cockerels

While capons are produced only in small number where their quality is known, they sell for fancy prices, according to D. H. Hall, extension poultry specialist of Clemson college, who suggests that the month of June is the best time to caponize young cockerels. At this season the market is usually low for broilers and it will pay to caponize cockerels and keep them for capons.

In selling these capons the local market must be developed first. Some of our tourist towns are already providing good market for capons and are paying good prices for them. Several men in South Carolina are caponizing for the farmers, and are marketing their products for them at a small cost.

The operation on the cockerel is not difficult usually, but should be performed with care. If the cockerels are starved out from 36 to 48 hours before the operation, it will help greatly. If the intestines are full of food the operation is very difficult.

Dirty Feet Retard Eggs

When yards and houses are wet and ooze with moisture most of the time, it means cold and dirty feet for the hens. A hen that "gets cold feet" seldom lays the right quota of eggs, and dirty feet make dirty nests and dirty eggs. In cases where a suitable dry location is hard to get, along with other desirable factors, place a three-inch tile even with the bottom of the foundation on the outside, and provide proper outlet for excess moisture.

Right Pullets to Keep

No pullets should be kept that do not develop rapidly and feather quickly. Stunted birds are never profitable. The hen that is to give a good account of herself in the laying house must develop frame and stamina during the growing period, otherwise she will never lay a paying number of eggs. Too many farm flocks are allowed to lag along through the spring, largely getting their own living; and, as a result, the pullets are slow in starting in to lay.

Where to Find Them

"Business morals have improved," said John Van Antwerp MacMurray, the new minister to China, at a Washington banquet.

"There's a story about a ghost, the ghost of an old-time business man. He appeared to his son one day and complained:

"'I've looked round Wall street and studied all the big corporations, George, and I find that there ain't a single business man of the old school left.'

"'Oh yes, there is,' said George. 'Just you give the once over to a few jails.'"

Dogs Still Convey Mail

The United States government employs about 3,000 dogs to carry mail in Alaska, notwithstanding the airplane has recently been put to use in doing in one day what it formerly required dogs two months to do. There are 68 dog mail routes, which are run in relays. The airplane route is from Fairbanks to McGrath and the plane travels in three hours a distance that took dogs 35 days to make.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says: "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and inclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

Mothers' Day Founder?

Though the Mothers' Day International association stoutly claims that its president, Miss Anna Jarvis of Philadelphia, originated Mothers' day, the American War Mothers have proclaimed Frank Hering of South Bend as the "father" of Mothers' day. They insist he agitated such an observance as far back as 1902. Others claim the idea started with Robert Cummins, Baltimore Sunday school superintendent.

Her Neighbor's Advice Helped Mrs. Frick

MRS. ADA FRICK
PERRYSBURG, OHIO

"YOU can be just as healthy, strong and happy as I am,' said one woman to her neighbor after listening to the description of her ailments,—'if you will take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My condition was very similar to yours, I suffered from those awful bearing down pains, weakness, backache, nervousness and headaches until I could hardly drag around. Today I am strong, well and happy because I followed the advice of a friend who had been greatly benefited by this old-fashioned root and herb medicine."

Nearly fifty years ago Lydia E. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass. prepared from medicinal roots and herbs Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Its fame has spread from shore to shore. You will now find in every community or neighborhood some woman who has been restored to health by its use, or has some friend who has. Therefore ask your neighbor.

Thousands of unsolicited testimonials such as the following are on file at the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., and prove the merit of this medicine. Therefore no woman should continue to suffer from such ailments.

Mrs. Frick Tells of Her Experience

PERRYSBURG, OHIO—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I suffered with pains in my sides all the time. I can't remember just how long I suffered but it was for some time. One day I was talking with a neighbor and I told her how I was feeling and she said she had been just like I was with pains and nervous troubles and she took the Vegetable Compound and it helped her. So then I went and got some and I certainly recommend it for it is good. Whenever I see a woman who is sick I try to get her to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—MRS. ADA FRICK, R. Senator Jas Couzens of Michigan is one of the real representatives of the American people despite the fact that he is a very wealthy man. The Senator is a Republican who doesn't vote as his party tells him to and in an interview the Senator said that the Republican machine always demanded that he should vote on the side of the "vested interests" and "vested interests" means Big Business and Big Business is hostile to the interests of the farmer and the laboring man. Some of the Republican leaders have been after the Senator's goat because he refuses to do their bidding among these leaders being Andy Mellon former big brewer, secretary of the U. S. Treasury and his friend Cal Coolidge. In addition, the Anaconda copper Co of Montana a corporation worth something like 168 millions is after Couzens' scalp. The Anaconda is the organization which put Prof. Levine out of the University of Montana because he showed how it was wading its taxes so it appears that Couzens of Michigan is having his hands full of trouble because he dares to put principle above party.

Death of Ellery Morford

Ellery Morford who has lived alone in Moscow township for some years went to a small knoll near his home to trim an apple tree on Monday. That was the last seen of him until Wednesday afternoon when a neighbor who happened to be passing discovered his dead body under the tree. The supposition is that heart trouble cause his sudden demise. Dr. McFarland of North Adams was called and the body removed to his home to await the coming of his daughters who live away. Ellery was born on the farm where he died March 5, 1855 being 70 years 3 months and 10 days of age. He is survived by one sister Mrs. Langdon of Jonesville and two daughters Mrs. Bertha Brooks and Mrs. Gertrude Brody both of Lawton, Michigan and grandchildren.

ROLAND BENGE

AS YOU SEE THEM

He was shabby and old and dirty. His eyes were rheumy from gazing into the depths of too many schooners; he had a rusty cap of summer variety pulled down over his shaggy head. Numerous punctures more or less conspicuous, dotted his time-battered rusty brown suit. 'Twas easy to see he was a failure as far as this world's goods are concerned. The time was early morning in front of the court house in Toledo. The old plebeian ambled with a halting, weakly step which the most unsophisticated could but know was the result of too much "home brew" and "forty-rod." Likely he had taken a fill a short time before and on an empty stomach it worked mighty quick, for he was getting into a state that behooves a man to seek a retired corner and deposit his limp figure. He walked unsteadily and swung his arms like a Dutch windmill along past the McKinley statue coming abreast of the iron flag staff from which streams "old glory." At once the old rounder came to attention and saluted. For about ten minutes the groggy one surveyed the emblem of his country, and during the time he delivered in pantomime an eloquent address but said nary a word. The whole business was done with his arms. The iron benches about the main walk were well occupied by people of all kinds, from the dapper young city official to the bum laborer out of a job, yet not the least attention was paid to the burlesque. It was obvious they had seen the old boy so many times before, he was a fixture. They regarded him the same as they did the McKinley statue and the care-taker who mowed the lawn. After a while the soggy one turned and went his way. "That old soaker—he's been here five years, and had five sober days" they told us. Prohibition where art thou?

She can't Eat Grass Enough

A cow producing 35 lbs. of milk daily cannot maintain that yield unless she has about 30 lbs. of dry matter in her feed.

Fresh pasture, which is nearly 80% water, contains but a small percentage of dry matter. This means that the cow will have to eat at least 175 lbs. of grass per day if she is to maintain both condition and milk yield.

Will your cows be able to find and crop that amount of pasture every day this summer? That is what you are expecting of them if you rely on grass alone. The result? A loss of milk and money, because few cows can eat more than 90 lbs. of grass in one day.

The remedy is simple. Feed Larro with pasture through the season—at the ratio of 1 lb. of Larro for each 5 lbs. of milk when pasture is plentiful, with a gradual increase as summer advances. Thus you can prevent the summer slump in milk; bring your cows into the fall in better condition for their winter work; and make more profit for yourself.

Amundsen Returns, Not Having Reached Pole—Death of LaFollette.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CAPT. ROALD AMUNDSEN and his companions have returned safely to Spitzbergen with one of the two planes in which they attempted to fly to the North pole. They were gone just four weeks and drove their planes to within less than 150 miles of the pole. Then, with their supply of petrol half gone, they started back, but found it necessary to descend in a lane of open water. The ice closed in on them quickly, but by desperate work they managed to extricate one of the planes and to prepare it for further flight. This took twenty-four days, and then the whole party started southward in the one plane. With good luck they reached North cape in eight and one-half hours and there a vessel was sighted which carried them back to Spitzbergen.

Though he failed in reaching the pole, Captain Amundsen was favored by fortune, for the time consumed in getting the plane out of the ice had used up about all the party's provisions and they could not have made the long trip to the edge of the ice fields on foot. So if the plane had failed them at last, they must have starved or frozen to death. It is believed Amundsen will soon make another attempt to fly to the pole.

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, United States senator from Wisconsin and the great fighting leader of progressives and insurgents in American politics, is dead. He passed away in Washington, the immediate cause of death being heart failure following an attack of bronchial asthma. He had been failing for a long time, however, and had been confined to his bed for a month on account of bronchitis and angina pectoris.

At the senator's bedside were Mrs. LaFollette, their two sons, Robert M., Jr., and Philip, and their two daughters, Mrs. George Middleton and Mrs. Ralph Sucher. They took his body back to his home in Madison, Wis., for interment on June 22. Mrs. La-Follette received from President Coolidge a letter of condolence, and like messages poured in from all parts of the country. Whatever men thought of LaFollette's policies, none could deny his great public services and indomitable courage. As Vice President Dawes said, he will be greatly missed from our national life.

NO, WE are not going to have another war with Mexico. At least, not in the immediate future. But we are going to continue to insist that Mexico recognize American rights in that country and indemnify Americans for their properties seized under the agrarian law. President Coolidge and his advisers have been considering just what steps should be taken, but there is not yet any information as to what they decided.

Relations with Mexico were brought sharply to public attention by a statement which Secretary of State Kellogg gave out, in which he warned our southern neighbor that she was on probation and must protect American lives and property and fulfill her international engagements and obligations. It appeared that Washington had been exchanging notes with Mexico for some time and Mr. Kellogg apparently thought it wise to let the public know something of the administration's policy. President Calles came right back at him with a red hot statement which was not only defiant but almost threatening. He said Mr. Kellogg's statement was incorrect and contradictory, and offered proofs that Mexico was conscious of its obligations and determined to comply with them. He continued:

"If the government of Mexico, as affirmed, is now on trial before the world, such is the case with the government of the United States as well as all those of other countries; but if it is to be understood that Mexico is on trial in the guise of a defendant my government absolutely rejects with energy such imputation which, in essence, would only mean an insult."

In Washington the Calles note was construed as mainly for home consumption and the administration ignored it officially. It was intimated that Calles would be given a few more weeks to act satisfactorily on American claims, and if he failed, a note of considerable vigor would be sent. Ambassador Sheffield has been in Washington for some time conferring with President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg, and it is not known whether he will return to his post.

Calles was not the only one who didn't like Mr. Kellogg's statement. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, told the secretary he feared it might encourage revolutionaries in Mexico, and he gave out a warning that American labor would not support a "policy savoring of dollar diplomacy." Senator Swanson of Virginia, ranking Democrat on the foreign relations committee of the senate, declared he disapproved of Mr. Kellogg's way of handling the situation and said it "offered serious possibilities for the United States." Down in Buenos Aires, Argentina, the president of the Latin-American union issued a statement for that body condemning the attitude of the United States toward Mexico as expressed by the Kellogg statement, as showing "that want of respect for the sovereignty of our peoples which is characteristic of the White House." The fervent sympathy of the Latin-American union was extended to Calles.

FOREIGN diplomats and Chinese delegates who met in Shanghai to try to bring about a settlement of the disturbed condition gave up the task and dispersed, the foreigners finding it impossible to accept the conditions imposed by the Chinese. The latter presented a lot of demands that were not directly connected with the occurrences that brought about the conference. The powers are apprehensive of serious eventualities, and have delivered to China another note calling attention to the growth of antiforeign sentiment and subversive tendencies and warning the government of the heavy responsibility incurred. In response the government has begun a roundup of radicals and a number of executions have been ordered. The great strike at Shanghai, which has been waxing and waning intermittently, may be called off any day, the foreign settlement authorities having agreed that if it is, the naval contingents will be removed, the volunteer corps demobilized and indemnity paid the families of the Chinese killed during the rioting. They insist that the Chinese chief of police be punished for permitting antiforeign propaganda.

Communist agitators, who are certainly receiving support from Moscow, continue to stir up all the trouble they can, concentrating their efforts largely on creating sentiment for the expulsion of all foreigners, especially the British and Japanese. Several Englishmen have been wantonly murdered and others assaulted, the plotters seemingly wishing to bring on a speedy crisis. It is reported the Japanese minister at Peking, hearing that the troops of Feng Yu-Hsiang, the Christian general, were about to join he radical students and establish a commissar government, asked Gen. Chang Tso-lin to occupy the city. The Manchurian commander thereupon started an army of 13,000 toward Peking with the avowed intention of supplanting Feng's troops and protecting both the government and the foreigners. Travelers from Siberia report seeing several trainloads of artillery and ammunition on the way from Russia to supply General Feng.

FRANCE'S reply to the German security pact proposal has been received in Berlin, but at this writing has not been made public. It is said to reject the plan for a general European security treaty and to urge Germany to make separate treaties of arbitration with all contiguous nations. Italy declined to adhere to the French note "until the exact scope and significance of the guarantee is more clearly defined." The Germans expect the exchange of notes will result in another international conference.

Meanwhile France is worried by the progress of two distinct movements in the restored provinces, Alsace and Lorraine. One is for autonomy and the other for complete secession from France. The leaders of the latter are Germans, but many of the inhabitants are in sympathy with it because of the recent fight made by the Catholics there against the establishment of public schools.

THE international conference on the control of the traffic in arms and munitions came to an end Wednesday. Eighteen countries signed the arms traffic convention, and twenty-seven signed the protocol by which the use of bacteria and poison gas in warfare was outlawed. Persia had previously withdrawn from the conference because it was decided that Persian vessels in the Persian gulf might be searched for arms.

LIEUT. COMMANDER DONALD B. MACMILLAN'S expedition to the arctic regions made its formal start from Boston when he and his party sailed in the steamer Peary for Wiscasset, Maine. There they were joined by the steamer Bowdoin, and the two vessels left Saturday for the far north. The ceremony of departure from Boston was made a part of the city's celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill, so there were speeches and the booming of cannon and the shrieking of whistles.

The Amundsen expedition having returned safely to Spitzbergen, there is nothing to divert MacMillan from his original plan, which is to explore the vast expanse of land known as Crocker land.

PLEAS of guilty have been entered by fifty of the fifty-six furniture manufacturers recently indicted at Chicago under the federal anti-trust laws and fines ranging from $5,000 down to $1,000 were imposed. This was done by agreement with the prosecution. The firms were charged with actually being a furniture trust, artificially maintaining prices.

EVERYTHING was prepared last week for the departure of President Coolidge and his household on June 23 for the summer White House at Swampscott, Mass. It was announced that the Chief Executive would have a real vacation—that he would receive but a few visitors and everyone who wished to call on him must first interview his secretary in Lynn, where the temporary executive office would be maintained. There will be a guard of marines about White Court to insure privacy for Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge. The yacht Mayflower will be kept nearby so they can enjoy short cruises.

ONE of the worst railway disasters of recent years occurred near Hackettstown, N. J., when a special train on the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western road was wrecked as a result of a storm that washed gravel upon the tracks. Forty-four persons lost their lives and many others were hurt. Most of the passengers were German-American residents of Chicago and vicinity who were on their way to Europe on a summer excursion.

EARLY in the week the Riffians recaptured the important fortress of Bibane from the French, and Premier Painleve, after his visit to the scene of war, told the chamber of deputies that Abd-el-Krim was able to conduct a strong offensive because of his previous victories, the help of adventurers from European armies and the assistance from other Moslem nations, particularly. Painleve said the French plan was to adopt blockade tactics, which would make the Riffians unable to continue hostilities more than a few months.

ANOTHER great leader of organized labor has passed away. Warren S. Stone, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers for many years and one of the best financiers in labor's ranks, died in Cleveland after a long illness. Among other notable persons who died last week were Julius Kruttschnitt, noted railway man who recently retired as directing head of the Southern Pacific company; and Emanuel L. Philipp, three times governor of Wisconsin.

Chinese Allege "Fox Devil" Is Incendiary

Foochow, China.—The hu-ti-ma has been busy in the provincial capital of Fukien, where electric lights, auto busses and modern education have gone a long way toward banishing ancient superstitions.

Hu-ti-ma is Fukienese for "fox devil" and signifies a certain evil spirit which is held responsible for many mysterious troubles in and around native homes. Three disastrous fires in recent weeks are attributed to its machinations.

One which started in the Anhui guild hall in the center of the city caused a panic because of its proximity to wealthy shops and homes. The next day an accusation was made before one of the officials of the city against the owner of an old-clothes shop near the guild hall.

In the bill of particulars it was alleged that on the evening of the fire two cats were fighting on the roof of this shop, and that they fell into the "heaven well" or area. Certain clerks in the shop, seeing that one was a very large cat with long white fur, killed it with the idea of selling the pelt. It transpired, however, that the cat was not a cat but a hu-ti-ma, and that in revenge its spirit set fire to the guild hall.

There is said to be a question whether the native fire insurance companies involved will pay the claims growing out of the fire or dispute them on the grounds that the fire was "an act of God."

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Detroit—A squadron of Detroit aviators headed by George W. Hopkins, president of the Detroit Flying Club, flew to Lansing recently to lunch with Adjutant General John S. Bersey. They hope to get Bersey's support in their effort to have the air squadron of the Michigan National guard stationed in Detroit.

Detroit—In the most sensational bank robbery since the notorious "Campus Martius job" of 1921, the police captured four bandits red handed but not before the bandits had shot a patrolman to death and wounded a little boy spectator. The robbery occurred in a branch of the Central Savings Bank at 6000 Chene street, at the corner of Harper avenue.

Lansing—The school census here nearly completed indicates that the city's population is in the neighborhood of 70,000, and not 80,000 as had been hoped. A population of 80,000 would give Lansing four more representatives on the Ingham county board of supervisors. The count of children, which has been completed, shows that 1,533 of school age reside in the city.

White Cloud—Hopelessly deadlocked after 23 hours of deliberation, the jury that, since May 25, has been trying Mrs. Alice Dudgeon for the murder of Romie Hodell was discharged by Judge Harry J. Dingeman, without having agreed upon a verdict. The disagreement is regarded by Newaygo county authorities as meaning the end of the prosecution of the 64-year-old swamp country woman for the slaying of her son-in-law.

Ann Arbor—Regents of the University of Michigan have approved a budget of $6,763,274.30 for the institution during 1925 and 1926. Appointment of a president to succeed the late Marion LeRoy Burton was postponed until the opening of the fall school semester with the request made of Acting President Alfred H. Lloyd, that he retain his present post "until October 1, 1925, or until further action by the board of regents."

Rochester—Fred M. Shinnick, wealthy Rochester man, connected with Briggs Manufacturing company, of Detroit, has turned over his recent $20,000 purchase of the historical Curry property here to the Women's club for a community house. At his own expense, Shinnick will put in a new heating plant and completely over-haul the building and will pay the up-keep and overhead. The changes will involve an expenditure of $40,000 or more.

Albion—The inauguration of Dr. John Lawrence Seaton, following one year of active work here, as the seventh president of Albion college, and the dedication of the Stanley S. Kresge gymnasium were outstanding events of the sixty-fourth commencement of the Methodist state college. A distinguished company of educators, added to the crowd of alumni and former student and townspeople, attended the inaugural ceremonies at the first Methodist church.

Calumet — Edward Erickson, 40 years old, fell 5,300 feet to his death down No. 5 Tamarack Shaft of the Calumet & Hecla Consolidated Copper Co. mine here. This is the world's deepest vertical shaft. According to old time miners this is the first time that a man's body has ever fallen the full length of No. 5 shaft, which is 20 feet more than a mile. Erickson was at work testing staging at the mouth of the pit and was standing on timber when his supports gave way suddenly and he dropped into the shaft.

Greenville—Following a week of investigation subsequent a coroner's inquest, Albert Beck, local resident, is under arrest, charged with assault with intent to murder, in connection with the death of Henry VanHorn, 79 years old, who died in a local hospital June 3. Death of the aged man was at first attributed to heart failure, but rumors of a fight between Beck and VanHorn just prior to the latter's death caused Deputy Sheriff Frank Sutherland to halt the burial of VanHorn June 6, and a coroner's jury was ordered by County Prosecutor John B. Lewis.

Alma—Announcement of a gift of $45,000 to Alma college, by Mrs. John F. Dodge, of Detroit, for a memorial to John F. Dodge, by President H. M. Crooks, was a prominent feature of the commencement exercises, as the largest class in the history of Alma college completed its college work. President Harry M. Gage, of Coe college, Cedar Rapids, Ia., gave the address, "The Responsibilities of Leadership," to the graduates, calling attention to those factors, intelligence, morality, great purpose, profound convictions, patience and personality, he said were needed.

Pontiac—The Butterfield theatrical interests have announced that they have purchased the Oakland theater building in Pontiac, the city's largest amusement house, and would take over the property July 1. The house is now operated by the Kleist Amusement Enterprise, Inc., which holds a lease. The building was sold by the Oakland Theater company, of Detroit, subject to the lease. The Butterfields announce that at the expiration of the lease they will remodel the building and put in a movie and Keith vaudeville house.

Grand Rapids—A thrill not on the schedule of sensations planned by Captain Charles Nungesser, famous French ace, and victor of 105 air battles during the war, was given a throng watching him make his initial stunt flight here, when he lost a wheel from his landing gear. Two other pilots took to the air and warned him. Deciding to risk landing, Nungesser glided to the field. His right arm was broken and one wing of the plane crushed, but by skillful flying he had avoided losing his life and found smiling beside the plane.

Mt. Clemens—A more intensive patrol of Macomb County roads was forecast here when the county board of supervisors authorized the purchase of four new motorcycles for the staff of riders employed by Sheriff George T. Smith.

Lansing—Fifty-five seniors at the Michigan State college have received commissions as second lieutenants in the United States army officers reserve corps as the result of their completion of four years' military work at the college.

Allegan—Mrs. Peter Berggren, wife of a merchant at Kellogg, six miles east of Allegan, was badly burned about the face, neck and arms when a gasoline stove in her home exploded. The home was destroyed by the fire that followed.

Ypsilanti—The new tax valuation of Ypsilanti has been fixed by the board of review at $10,605,145, an increase of more than 17 per cent over last year when it was $9,016,095. The budget for the coming year calls for the expenditure of $197,950.

Adrian—This city is inviting all former residents to return to Adrian June 28 to July 4 for the centennial celebration. Mayor Herbert R. Clark signed a proclamation address to "all persons of Adrian blood living away from their mother city" to attend the exercises.

Monroe—The city commission has issued an order that all dogs must be vaccinated, muzzled or tied up until October 1, owing to the prevalence of rabies in the city and vicinity. Perry F. Warthen, 80 years old, the dog warden, says the order must be obeyed by all owners of dogs.

Lansing—A complete schedule of proposed increases and decreases in telephone rates which was filed with the State Public Utilities Commission by the commission's engineers, shows that aside from Detroit, Bay City and Saginaw only five Michigan communities have been listed for decreases.

Monroe—Twelve of the surviving 55 members of the famous old Seventh Michigan Volunteer infantry held their thirty-ninth annual reunion here at the Park hotel. Major Robert C. Knaggs, 90 years old, Evanston, Ill., president, presided and Mrs. Creighton Crawford, Oxford, was the secretary.

Holland—John Baird, director of the State Department of Conservation, is preparing to take action against three industrial concerns of Holland to compel them to cease the pollution of Black Lake, it was said here. The State Health Department, it was explained, has complained of the condition of the lake, which is surrounded by a large summer resort.

Jackson—George Burben and John Mason, prisoners working at the Chelsea cement plant of the State Prison, escaped and were still at large. Burben was sentenced from Detroit March 22, 1924, to serve from five to 15 years for robbery unarmed, and Mason was sentenced from Detroit Dec. 16, 1924, to serve from five to 15 years for breaking and entering.

Lansing—The Detroit, Grand Haven & Milwaukee Railroad, a Grand Trunk subsidiary paralleling the Wider Woodward avenue project between Detroit and Pontiac, has answered the resolution adopted by the 1925 Legislature suggesting that the State purchase the road. A report was filed with the Attorney General, protesting that Legislature exceeded its powers.

Camp Custer—Camp Custer is in readiness for the opening of the military training season June 19. From that date until almost the end of the summer the camp once more will take on the appearance that it did during the war, when it was the training ground for thousands of Michigan and Wisconsin soldiers. The first units to to arrive this year will be the Reserve Officers Training Corps. Men in this organization are expected June 18.

Ann Arbor—While an intermittent rain sprinkled the 15,000 spectators, John Huston Finley, editor of the New York Times, and well known educator and publicist, wrote the final chapter in the college career of the 1,703 graduates of the University of Michigan in the annual commencement exercises at Ferry Field. And, as the rain brought out several thousand umbrellas, Finley outlined, briefly, simply and stripped of the usual stiffness and formality of a commencement address, "The Mysteries of the Mind's Desire."

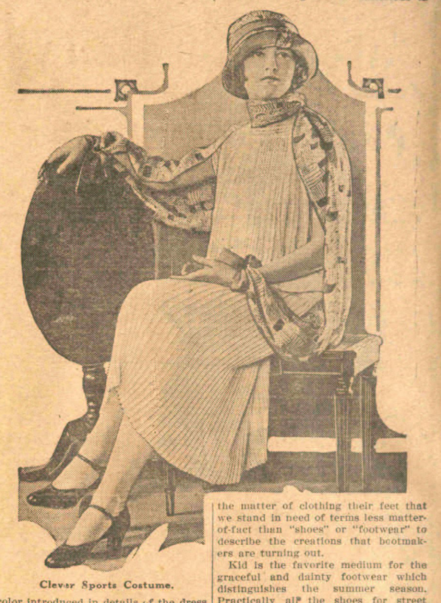
Flint—Frank Ayres, 63 years old, proprietor of a gasoline station here, was killed when a robber, who had waited until the station was closed for the night, shot him three times in a running fight on Cornelia street. According to residents of the vicinity, Ayres had closed his station and taken the money from the place, when the thug darted across the street and attempted to hold him up. Ayres resisted and the two men struggled along Cornelia street. The aged proprietor was dead before he could be taken to the hospital.

Lansing—The Security Trust Co., receivers for the Detroit United Railway and subsidiaries, has asked the Michigan public utilities commission for authority to increase all fares to 3 cents a mile. The petition maintains the company had suffered serious losses and is unable to operate under its present fares, the highest of which is 2 1-2 cents a mile. Coincident with filing the petition W. G. Fitzpatrick, counsel for the receivers, explained plans of the D. U. R. for establishing a rapid transit system in and out of Detroit.

St. Joseph—Sheriff Fred Frantz and his deputies were combing Berrien county for men who blew up two safes in Benton Harbor, and attempted to smash their way into another in the store of Robert Taylor, Union Pier. Using nitro-glycerine, the yeggs shattered the doors of safes in the Northern Coca Cola plant and the Wilson Ice Cream company. From the first place they obtained $350 in cash; from the latter between $200 and $300. The sheriff has found no clues. The safe in Taylor's store had the combination lock knocked of

FOCUS ON SPORTS APPAREL; SHOES FOR THE FASTIDIOUS

JUST at this season of the year when all our world goes jaunting about on vacations and outings, fashion interest centers on sports clothes and designers busy themselves with new versions of the best liked styles. We see the prophecies that this would be a "white summer" fulfilled today in sports and other apparel in which white predominates, with touches of color introduced in details of the dress or in accessories worn with it.



Clever Sports Costume.

The white skirt, usually plaited, and made of silk crepe, wool or rayon materials, maintains its important position for street and sports wear and is worn with slipon blouse of gay printed silk showing colored patterns on a white ground. White crepe de chine with printed border designs in high colors is used for these blouses, which are made with short kimono sleeves, the border appearing at the bottom of the blouse. All white blouses of crepe de chine prove themselves useful for either sports or other wear. One of these, with a white plaited skirt, is shown in the picture, worn with a scarf and hat set of printed silk. The ends of the scarf are finished with ribbon, extended into ties that fasten about the wrists. By this clever contrivance the scarf plays a double role making a graceful sleeve drapery.

When a blouse of printed silk is worn with a white skirt, fashion favors a white hat and scarf set, the scarf finished at the ends with a border like the silk in the blouse. Or if a white blouse with colored border is chosen the scarf is bordered to match, or motifs cut from the printed silk are applied to it at the ends.

In footwear white strap slippers or sport shoes, or black slippers are popular but do not monopolize the showings of summer sports shoes. Light gray and tan, or combinations of white with a color, in shoes having a definite sports character, contribute variety in dainty footwear. Other interesting accessories shown are the gay Chinese parasols of paper that will withstand a little shower, for one thing, and cretonne jackets and coats for another.

Concerning the apparel of women mere man has always expressed himself in a way that is forceful and betrays where his thoughts dwell. But as a result of his logic he usually strikes the nail on the head, and now he is saying that women are wearing millinery on their feet. This is a very arresting and revealing remark—a tribute to the daintiness and beauty of current styles in footwear. Women have grown so fastidious in the matter of clothing their feet that we stand in need of terms less matter-of-fact than "shoes" or "footwear" to describe the creations that bootmakers are turning out.

Kid is the favorite medium for the graceful and dainty footwear which distinguishes the summer season. Practically all the shoes for street wear or for afternoon are made of it and also many of the dressier types for evening. The new models prove very flattering to the feet made with toes a shade more rounded and heels a trifle higher than they have been—all feet look small in them. Styles are conservative and elegant, with many attractive combinations of leather to give them interest, and endless variation of the strap slipper and oxford to choose from. The handsome pumps of black kid, trimmed with a shaped band of white kid, shown here worn with a crepe afternoon frock, are typical of present styles. In the slippers at the right the pinnacle of summer comfort and style is achieved in brown kid worn with silk hose to match, and this outfitting of the feet is approved for morning or afternoon, with tailored or dressier costumes. Below are handsome white kid oxfords for wear with summer frocks and sports clothes and equally good style with tailored suits and frocks. They will delight those women who choose white footwear in summer.

Plaited Jabot

Streamer Ties Worn

Streamer ties are a feature of many of the blouses and frocks worn with ensemble costumes. The streamers are long and the knot may be either close up to the throat or looped loosely as low as the waistline.

Hats From England

The smart little English hats of stitched felt turned up in front and held with a decorative pin are rapidly achieving a vogue in America. They come in all the sport colorings.

Balbriggan Frocks Are Striped

Among the smartest versions of the jumper frock are those made of balbriggan which have skirts in a plain color and the upper part fashioned of a crosswise striped material. The stripes are of the candy-stick type and extremely youthful and pretty.

Paris Favors Gold on White

Paris has introduced the evening frock of white with touches of gold for trimming, and already its vogue in this country is established.

The Newest Affliction is "Looney Gas"

The. Dupont-Nemours Powder Co., has several big plants for the manufacture of poisonous gases and by products of powder manufacture. At one plant in Orange, New Jersey, engaged in the making of radium paint for watch dials, eight persons have died in eighteen months from poisonous fumes inhaled. There is a property called tetraethyl lead which is used for anti-knock gasoline, and which is the most deadly. People have been known to succumb merely from inhaling the fumes of the exhaust from a motor, and in New Jersey the plants have been shut down. The affliction which is brought on by this particular form of poisoning is called "butterfly dementia" and persons so afflicted always imagine the air is full of butterflys much the same as sufferers from delirium tremens. Instances are on record where persons walking on the street have been known to suddenly leap into the air and make wild grabs for the winged insects which are nowhere in sight.

The Duponts, rich manufacturers have used every known precaution to safeguard their plant spending $2,000,000 for a plant and $60,000 on improvements. They have hired specialists to care for the sick and paid life insurance on the deaths to the dependants of those dying from poisoning.

Michigan Farmers Urged To Plant Emergency Hay Crop

Immediate planting of soybeans or sudan grass as a means of overcoming the poor pasture and prospective short hay crop brought about by the hot and protracted dry weather in many sections is urged upon Michigan farmers by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. Late estimates of the state's hay crop this year is that it will be a million, six hundred thousand tons under that of last year, and its condition is 14 percent below the ten year average for this season of the year.

On farms in the state where the hay crop shows the effects of the dry and hot weather farmers should lose no time in renewing provisions for forage for the summer and fall, according to the Institute. The season is too far advanced for the planting of early emergency crops, and soybeans or sudan grass or a combination of both are about the most practicable for immediate use They have been planted successfully as late as July 1, but the county agent or state agricultural college should be consulted on the particular varieties best suited to local soils and conditions.

Soybeans have been found particularly valuable on poor soil or soils low in lime where other legumes failed to catch without fertilizer or lime, says the Institute, and yields have averaged one to three tons per acre, varying with rainfall and temperature. Furthermore, soybeans improve the soil, fit into the crop rotation system, stand heat and drought well, grow well on a great variety of soils, and the hay is particularly well adapted as a substitute for clover and alfalfa, where, these ecrops may have been winter killed. Because of its high protein content and palatability, it is conceded to rank in feeding value almost as high as alfalfa.

The Irony of The City

The little lad who sold papers on the corner has gone to other fields —he has no more troubles—he met a big Cadillac touring car and it killed him. Well, we sometimes think life out here in the country districts is monotonous and hard, but we find it is far ahead of the existence led by the average news boy who daily cries extras from the city streets. The boy to whom we refer, had a good business, in fact he sold more than most of the other ragmuffins, but his chances in life were very poor, so poor, that we can't wish him back. A drinking father and a dissolute delinquent mother could not provide a docimile and the boy must have went the way of all vicious law breakers.

In winter's biting blasts and summer's blistering heat, he catered to the public, but 'twas little use to be anything but a hoodlum. Business men who had an eye out for enterprise, often crossed the street to patronize him, hence the success of his business.

The Cadillac which snuffed out his life was the property of a rich Nabob over on the Avenue, who didn't stop to inquire at the hospital if his victim would live. He was too busy figuring out a bunch of shorts in the wheat pit. He'll never think of that newsboy again unless someone should mention it, or he should read this article. Such is the irony of the city.

Philander Gotrox was born in a log cabin in a tamarack swamp of Michigan, but he didn't stay there! At the age of 17 Gotrox decided his father was too confounded over bearing, so he left the old man and went to Toledo where he entered a printing office. Not being a professional he was turned over to the superintendent for instruction. Now this boss was a partner in the business, a dissolute hard drinking rounder who had a disposition not any too good to start with, and was a veritable demon when sogged with bad whisky. The insane abuse which Gotrox had to take, nearly drove him from the printing trade, but he didn't quit. We'll call the foreman Shell but that wasn't his name. Shell kept putting up the abuse to Gotrox but the latter learned the business: he became foreman, and superintendent; he purchased a small plant and it grew. To-day Gotrox is not a type sticker he's a wealthy shop owner. He drives a Packard sedan. The other day as Gotrox' Packard was going down Adams street, a drunken man reeled in front of it and was knocked down. They took him to the hospital and Gotrox went his way. The ragmuffin who was hurt was Shell. It is needless to go on, but the irony of the city is with us.

They Have 'Em

Dr. Royal S.C. Squilldozer who is a member of the public health board or something else in New York City, conducts a health column in the Jackson Daily News, and he leaks out valuable secrets as to killing various pestiferous diseases. such as talkinitis, liquoritis, etc. Also gives directions for curing morbidity of the cerebellum caused by too much home brew the Sunday before. Below are a few of the knotty problems the doctor is called upon to solve:

A Guilty Reader—"What causes my joints to crack?"

Answer—Too much inactivity. You should arise at 4:00 a. m.and hoe 17 rows of potatoes before even thinking of breakfast. Then return to the house and jerk your wife from bed and otherwise accelerate her movements by numerous swift kicks. This will remove the cracks from your joints also from her's.

"I am troubled with a real thick phlegm in my throat these dry days, and a dark brown taste is predominating."

Answer—This disease is purely local and about three nips of "forty-rod" taken fifteen minutes before and after each meal will generally cut the phlegm; if it does not, you are a hopeless case and should see your local physician at once. If he can't do something to save you from the bug college it is because you won't pay or you are not destitute enough to get it from the supervisor.

A Shy One—"Is yeast good for my complexion?"

Answer:—Yeast is good for any thing that needs baking. There is no question about it. We all know how badly a half-baked loaf disagrees with us. By all means eat large quantities of yeast, especially of the compressed variety, and let it ripen thoroughly before using, say for ten days or a week. There is no question but both your complexion and self-esteem will be built up amazingly.

A Puzzled Damsel—"I am bothered with superfluous hair"

Answer:—Don't wonder at it. We have been so thoroughly saturated with Bolshevism that whiskers are growing on babes, and in one instance it was necessary to shave the butter. We are at present experimenting with a process which we hope will remove all hair from the human system and no other manipulation will be necessary. In the meantime don't worry about your hair. Next season it is possible a medium coat of it will be about all the fashionable bather (on the quiet) will wear.

LEISURE WITH CULTURE ON THE ELECTRIC FARM

Some Believe Also That Electric Power and Radio May Shift Cultural Centers of Future From Urban to Rural Districts.

Within the last two years a conviction has found expression among a few public men, such as Senator Arthur Capper, that the farm-electrical agitation is about to bring about an astonishing economic revolution. The social influence of electrical methods on American farms in general will produce a new era of American national culture if these expectations are realized.

Speaking recently to a gathering of mid-western farmers, David Sarnoff, vice president and general manager of the Radio Corporation of America, said that radio's greatest contribution to American civilization will be its effect upon the farmer. On more than 300,000 farms radio has already lessened isolation, increased knowledge and spread information and entertainment.

As fast as electric lights and electric power are established upon the farm with the maximum of benefit to the farmer, just so fast will leisure time on the farm increase and overworked farm families will become a thing of the past. Then the radio set will be turned to even more eagerly. Its possibilities for taking to the farmer culture, religion, education and all the finer things that compose a great civilization will be multiplied.

It is the belief of many that these new influences will result in closely-knit farm families in the future, yet a new kind of farm folk, who will practice co-operation for the good of all, who will be informed, discerning, thoughtful and well developed mentally and spiritually—as well as contented with their blue-sky environment to such a degree that few will leave the farm for the city.

That, it is predicted, will mean that the future cultural stability of the nation will very likely draw much more from the farm and less from the city. If this occurs it will be due principally to electricity—and its off-shoot, radio, coupled with the freedom from urban distractions found in rural districts.

Owen D. Young of the General Electric Company, raised as a farm boy, now a high official of an electrical manufacturing concern—and therefore familiar with both subjects—has declared that in the days of his youth "the attraction of an occupation out-of-doors, with good food and comfortable living, was not enough to offset the cultural advantages of the city, its lectures, its music and immediate access to the news of the world.

"Now all this has changed. Good roads have made the farms accessible. The mail carrier brings the news. The gas engine, electricity and improved machinery have assumed the drudgery. The telephone and the motor car have enlarged the neighborhood. Radio has brought instruction, entertainment and cultural advantages, not from one city only, but from many."

DOES RADIO OFFER OPPORTUNITIES?

When the board of directors of the Radio Corporation of America, composed of some of the leading figures in American industry, announced that David Sarnoff had been elected vice-president and general manager, one of the romances of American industrial opportunity came to light. Mr. Sarnoff, at the age of 32, was awarded one of the most active and pivotal positions in the radio industry. And although he won it at the age of 32, it came to him after 16 years of close application to the every-day problems of radio.

David Sarnoff

Most persons would ask off hand how any man—not to particularize about one who today is only 34—could have worked in the radio industry for 18 years when the industry itself seems so much younger. Mr. Sarnoff went into the radio telegraph business when he was 16 and when radio itself (1906) was in its infancy. He is the man who took the message in New York from the S. S. Olympic, 1,400 miles at sea, giving first confirmation of the sinking of the S. S. Titanic ten years ago; he is also the man who seven years ago, when radio telegraphy alone was considered an accomplished fact, presented a plan to his superiors which conceived a simple radio telephone "music box" for every home boasting of a talking machine. This plan is today the essence of broadcasting.

Accepting a variety of assignments from office boy to radio operator on ship and shore and inspector which brought him in contact with traffic conditions existing within shipboard and land stations, Mr. Sarnoff developed a sound understanding of the vital problems of commercial radio communication. Equipped with this valuable fundamental knowledge and a technical education, Mr. Sarnoff was later well prepared to accept the responsibilities of assistant chief engineer, traffic manager and contract manager of his company. In 1917 he accepted still greater responsibilities by assuming entire charge of the commercial department of the company which he organized most effectively.

These positions afforded an opportunity for Mr. Sarnoff to exhibit his executive qualifications and thus quickly win for him the signal recognition of his superiors. The Radio Corporation of America appointed Mr. Sarnoff to the office of general manager in 1921, and then to vice president and general manager.

John Robinson's Circus In Hillsdale July 4

The earth's oldest circus, John Robinson's, will soon be in our midst, as the billboards throughout the country proclaim in loud and lurid colors, its coming to Hillsdale for afternoon and night performances on July Fourth. Hundreds of circus lovers of this community are making plans to attend the circus that day, as the merit and superiority of John Robinson's Circus is well known here.

John Robinson comes this year with an entirely new performance from the opening of the gorgeous spectacle, "Peter Pan in Animal Land" to the sensational and thrilling finishing numbers. Europe and the Orient were sacked for novelties and features by representatives of the circus last winter, and the foremost wild animal acts of the universe were purchased and added to the Robinson's double menagerie.

Capt. Ricardo, Theo Schroeder, W. W. Weaver, Dewey Butler, Bob Thornton, Nellie Roth, Lorraine Wallace and Margaret Thompson are a few of the noted subjugators, whose charges will work in the arenas and in the rings. The largest group of polar bears to ever appear in public will be worked by Theo Schroeder, famous European trainer. "Kittie" the only wrestling tiger in the universe will be another distinct feature that is offered by no other circus.

International troupes and families of repute will also be found performing under John Robinson's big seven pole top. The Morales Family from Mexico, the Sing Sing Chinese, the Rudy Rudynoffs Family from Austria, Senorita Piedad from South America, and other foreign countries will all be represented, for John Robinson's dressing tent is truly a melting pot. As for clowns, fifty of the funniest and foolishest fellows ever turned loose will cavort in the sawdust arena.

The New Fourth

It is strange, though ordinary enough in our experience, how great happenings, tremendous forces that move through our lives carrying us forward to regions we scarce dared hope to enter, slip into their destined day, make their mark and merge into the dynamic power of our unconscious life, without our being in the least aware that they have tilted the axis of our spiritual world and that never again will the shadow of darkness fall as far or as deeply upon it. We see the result, but not often do we seek or discern the cause.

We are about to celebrate the one hundred and forty ninth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. There are about one hundred million of us, and I venture to say that out of every hundred who will make holiday scarce a handful would recognize the Declaration were they to hear it. Now how does it happen that events of such lasting and far reaching importance make so little conscious mark upon us? We are as a people, amazingly unconscious of the Declaration of Independence

To the men who framed it and to the generation who fought and endured that it might be made manifest in the life of the new nation, it was but the record of the moving finger of destiny. They were too deeply engaged in clothing the spirit in deeds to regard its creation as tremendously important, They were the Declaration of Independence.

But what of those who came after? They knew neither the letter nor the spirit. They felt the effects of its beneficent power, but they had no knowledge of the source. They accepted the ease of body and mind it endowed, but the true inwardness of its flaming spirit they knew not at all. This has continued to the present day, so that now the Declaration is something printed in small type in the back of the school histories or a vague reference in the speech of the Fourth of July orators. It is worthy a more intimate knowledge.

The Declaration is the most perfect expression of the dignity of the human soul that has been written since the sermon on the Mount It is more than a record; it is far, far more than the record of an historic event. Its words are majestic; royal, in their absolute rightness. Its message is an anthem of victory, an exultant announcement of the definite end of an age of suffering and oppression. It is a herald proclaiming the kinship of men with their Father which is in heaven. The freedom of the peoples of the earth is shadowed forth in this document.

Yet Thomas Jefferson, who wrote it, slipped his original draft among his papers and seemed glad to forget it. He was too close to the creation of his masterpiece to know it for what it was. He had suffered as the soul of the creative artist must ever suffer, from the criticism his work had called out in the debate on the floor of Congress. That over and his work accepted, he was glad to let the memory of the grueling struggle rest.

There was tumult in the Colonies George III had exhausted the patience of patient men, and they were gathering their forces toward rebellion. Virginia had called a convention to dissolve her relationship with the Crown, and Jefferson had drawn up a list of charges against the king which he intended to incorporate in the Virginia Constitution. The Virginia convention sent Richard Henry Lee to the Continental Congress meeting in Philadelphia to present a resolution declaring the independence of the Colonies. Mason had already written his Bill of Rights. The thirteen Colonies were seething.

The members of the Continental Congress knew that Lee's resolution would be adopted, and appointed a committee to present the case for the colonies to the world. Jefferson did the work of the committee. His material was at hand. He used the Bill of Rights for the second paragraph, followed that with the charges against the king which he had drawn up for the Virginia Constitution, and closed with Lee's resolution. He wielded these with the pen of the artist under the inspiration of a pure patriotism.

Franklin and Adams read Jefferson's draft and Franklin is credited with eleven changes that show his magic power over words, his keen insight into the workings of men's minds and his firm faith in the undertaking.

Where Jefferson had written, "When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for a people to dissolve the bands," etc. Franklin made it read, "When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the bands," etc. How strong is the power of one word!

Where Jefferson, in doubt about the possible action of the Congress had written, "They should declare the causes which impel them to threaten separation," Franklin, scorning doubt and affirming his faith, made it. "They should declare the causes that impel them to the separation."

The sharpest change he made was in the familiar line, "We hold these truths to be—" Jefferson had written, "sacred and undeniable," but Franklin crossed out the weaker words and wrote "self evident." Now read it and see the power of a strong man's vision as it shines through his words. Read it again, and know that the Declaration of Independence is not a bit of fine writing, not a faded parchment intended for the musty archives, but the evidence of the spirit of a nation inscribed by the burning spirit of its inspired patriots. The words of the famous pronouncement are like the everlasting rocks; they are words that stand for their own purpose and intent and none other they are words that will outlast the years and but shine the brighter in the mellowing light of time.

For years the people of the country seemed to have forgotten the existence of the Declaration. It had served the purpose in telling a "candid world" the cause of the quarrel between one people and another and in setting forth the principles upon which this people intended to live. Then one day a writing master thought it would make fine copy for his facile pen and he arranged for the publication of a decoratively inscribed copy. Immediately his publication was attacked by a rival publisher, and in the heated quarrel which followed the Declaration was well advertised.

Battle Ball

Battle Ball, a spectacular indoor tournament and drawing room game which has reached the craze stage in Europe, is also spreading over the United States, becoming the latest American sport and social fad.

The game was recently brought to the United States and introduced here by Dr. Alexander Hryntschak, Vienna sportsman, who "fathered" the game in Europe. Following its initial debut at an invitation tournament sponsored by Dr. Ludwig von Kleinweachter, Austrian consul general, it has been taken up by some of America's most exclusive clubs, inclusive of the South Shore, Lottmoor and Ravisloe country clubs, Chicago, and is being played in hundreds of homes.

Battle Ball seems to develop its chief thrills and fascination from action, accuracy and strategy. To the American it appears to be a combination of several sports. It is played by from two to fourteen persons at a time on tables that vary in size accordingly and somewhat resemble billiad tables with small guns mounted on the sides and ends.

The guns shoot small metal balls at a larger leather ball. The players are organized into teams to play on the larger tables. Each team has a goal keeper, supported by backs and forwards, the lineup being similar to soccer football and basketball.

The goal keeper is directly behind the goal posts where there is a "pocket" to receive the ball if a goal is made. The guards sit to the right and left of the goal keeper. The forwards are at the sides of the table nearest the opposing team's goal.

Before starting the game, a coin is tossed to determine which team is to make the first shot. The ball is then placed in the center of the table and the signal to start is given by the referee. Operating the guns which project the metal balls with startling rapidity, the opposing teams attempt to shoot the leather ball into each other's goal. Every time a goal is made the ball is again placed in the center of the field and the goal keeper of the team which lost the goal makes first shot.

A game is played in two halves of ten or fifteen minutes each. At the end of the first half players change goals. The game is won by the team which scores the greatest number of goals during the match.

In Chicago where the game was first played in this country, enthusiasts followed the precedent in Europe where about 1,500 resorts and clubs, including St. Moritz, Davos Carlsbad, Scheveningen and Milan are playing the game on a tournament basis. They organized the Battle Ball Clubs of America, and are now playing a series of intra-city tournaments preparatory to a national tournament.

Fully half of the members of the clubs are women, and in reality the feminine sex seems to get a greater thrill out of the activity, noise and flying pellets than the men. Incidentally, most of the women players so far dislike the nets used in Europe to keep the brass balls from occasionally flying from the table and striking players.

Several of the country's best known sportsmen and athletes, as well as the "white front" crowd are taking to the game, among those having tried it being "Red" Graham, former University of Chicago star; Laddie Myers, Dartmouth star pole vaulter; Al Journeay, former Pennsylvania All-American football Captain, and others.

Players attribute the principal fascination of the game to three things: It brings indoors some of the thrills of outdoor games such as polo and football; while players can develop amazing skill, the novice can get a thrill out of the first five minutes of play, and it is a game of uninterrupted action. Battle Ball is known as "Goal Game" in Holland, Switzerland, Luxembourg, Germany, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Sweden and Denmark.

WAS NOT FIT TO DO HER WORK

Dreadful Condition of Mrs. Fullerton's Health Remedied by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Clearfield, Pa.—"I cannot begin to tell you how much Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me in every way. Before taking it I couldn't stand on my feet without pains running all through my whole body from my waist down, just like threads pulling. I was not fit to do any work. My mother got me to try the Vegetable Compound and I have found great benefit, and I not only recommend it for such troubles, but to build up the whole system. I have used it for most everything that gets wrong with me. When I begin to feel nervous and irritable I don't stop long in getting a bottle of the Vegetable Compound if I haven't got one in the house. It gives a fine appetite and makes a new woman of me. You may use this testimonial in my own town or anywhere else, and I will answer any letters I receive."—Mrs. RUSH FULLERTON, 525 S. 2nd Street, Clearfield, Pa.

If you are suffering from nervous troubles, irritability, give the Vegetable Compound a fair trial. For sale by druggists everywhere.

His Symptoms

"I believe Pole Taddicum is figgering on getting married or something of the sort," said the landlord of the Petunia tavern.

"What makes you think so?" asked Burt Blurt.

"Well, he was a good checker player no longer than a month ago, but now instead of playing the game he just funters with it. Sometimes he won't play more than two hours until he says he's tired and quits. Of course, a feller is allowed to do a reasonable amount of studying before making a move, but sometimes Pole will set and stare at the board for half an hour if you don't poke him, and not make a move. Yes, sir; as sure as you're born, he is either thinking about getting married or else is afraid he's got an incurable disease."—Kansas City Star.

Most Crowded State

The greatest density of population in the United States is not found in New York, but in Rhode Island, which has 566 people to the square mile. Massachusetts comes next with 479 per square mile. New Jersey is third with 420, Connecticut fourth with 286 and New York fifth with 217 per square mile. The District of Columbia with 7,292 to the square mile stands in a class apart. The most thinly populated state is Nevada, with only seven-tenths of a citizen for each square mile.—New York Times.

King Tommy

By GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM

Copyright by Bobbs-Merrill Co.—W. N. U. Service

"SOME MISTAKE!"

SYNOPSIS.—In London the teller of the story of the adventures of "King Tommy," and known hereafter as "Uncle Bill," is informed by Lord Norheys, son of an old friend, that Lord Troyte, head of the British foreign office, Norheys' uncle, has a scheme to make him (Norheys) king of Lystria, in central Europe, through marriage to Calypso, daughter of King Wladislaws, deposed monarch of that country. A financier, Procopius Cable, knows there is oil in profusion in Lystria, and with an English king on the throne the output could be secured for England. Norheys, in love with a stage dancer, Viola Temple, is not enthusiastic over the proposition. The patriarch, Menelaus, highest ecclesiastical dignitary in Lystria, is heartily in favor of the restoration of the monarchy, and Cable has generously financed the sentiment. Calypso is making a living dancing in the "Mascotte," Berlin cabaret. Norheys refuses to entertain the idea of giving up Viola Temple, to whom he is secretly engaged. "Uncle Bill's" sister Emily urges him to secure a passport from Lord Troyte for a certain Janet Church, strongminded female who wants to visit Lystria in the interests of a society for world peace. Janet Church leaves for Berlin. "Uncle Bill" is again appealed to by his sister to find a certain curate (name not given) who has left his parish in Ireland for a visit to Berlin, and cannot be found. Lord Norheys and Viola Temple disappear from London. Procopius Cable receives information that Norheys, with the princess, has left there on his way to Lystria, but Norheys appears with the former Viola Temple, now his wife. The question is, "Who is the man who has gone to Lystria with the Princess Calypso?"

Part II.—Berlin

CHAPTER VII

It is easy to understand how the mistake was made.

Count Istvan Casimir does not know English very well. He has never been in England and at that time had never talked to any Englishman except the tutor who educated him as a boy and taught him to read Shakespeare. The tutor must have been a Shakespearean enthusiast, for Casimir has more quotations ready for use than most of us. Unfortunately, his knowledge of Shakespeare did not help much in his correspondence with Procopius Cable. The English which Cable uses is of a modern and commercial kind. I can fancy his writing to Casimir: "Yours of even date"; or "of the 12th ult. to hand"; or "re Lystrian monarchy, we regret—" Shakespeare did not write in that style and I do not suppose that Casimir understood half Cable wrote. Nor did Cable quite understand Casimir. He was inclined to skip the quotations of the count's letters, not realizing that they conveyed the most important kinds of information. Casimir, for instance, might write: "Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious summer." Cable would take that for mere ornament, the exuberance of a man not trained to business. He would fail to realize that Casimir meant that the restoration of the monarchy was a gloriously accomplished fact, or would be gloriously accomplished as soon as the monarch put in an appearance.

Of course the similarity of the two names deceived Casimir. He was in Berlin waiting and watching for the arrival of Lord Norheys. It was natural enough that he should think his man had come when he saw Norreys in the register of the Adlon hotel. There is only the difference of one letter between the two names. He was further misled by the "Reverend." Tommy, in those days, was most particular about his "Reverend" and set himself down as Reverend T. A. Norreys. Casimir was not familiar with the title. It was not, apparently, accorded to the clergy in Shakespearean days. The parson in "As You Like It" was styled "Sir"—"Sir Oliver," as if he had been a knight. On the other hand, "Reverend" was used of Venetian seigneurs and such people. Casimir took it for an English version of "Hoch Wohl-geborne." It left him in no doubt that Tommy was the man he wanted.

Tommy, of course, had never heard of Count Casimir. I do not suppose he had ever heard of Lord Norheys either, or of Procopius Cable, or indeed of Lystria. He had not the slightest intention of going farther east than Berlin. Indeed, he did not mean to leave Berlin during his holidays, unless perhaps for a little trip to Potsdam.

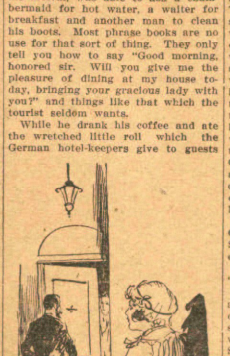
Tommy has explained to me exactly why he went to Berlin and what he meant to do there. A year or so earlier he had bought a number of German marks on the advice of a friend who professed to be a financial expert. At that time he got three hundred and forty marks for a pound and they seemed cheap enough. Tommy's friend said that very soon they would stand at twenty-five or thirty to a pound. Tommy believed him and invested every penny he possessed in German marks. I do not know how many he actually bought, but the number was considerable, and the sum he stood to gain would have been a nice little fortune. An investment which promises to multiply your capital by eleven or twelve is very attractive, even if it pays no interest for a while.

As everybody knows, the financial experts, Tommy's friend among them, were disastrously wrong, even more hopelessly wrong than experts usually are. The marks depreciated rapidly and in the spring of 1922 it took one thousand four hundred of them to buy a pound. Tommy realized he was the victim, one of many victims, of a gigantic swindle. But being a man of cheerful and buoyant disposition, he did not wring his hands or curse fate. He thought that though marks were of little use in England, they probably had some value in their native land; that is to say, that he would be able to buy a good many dinners, bottles of wine, theater tickets and such things with his marks in Germany. He asked for a holiday, packed his entire store of marks in a dispatch box and went to Berlin. He meant to stay there as long as the marks lasted and to have as good a time as he could. Tommy was a fool to buy the marks originally. He was wise in his plan for getting rid of them. Things of the sort he wanted really were very cheap in Berlin in the early part of 1922.

He had never been abroad before and he did not know a word of German. He started with a return ticket, a Baedeker's Guide to Berlin and a German-English phrase book, which professed to give him, spelled phonetically, all that a traveler could possibly want to say.

It must have been a good phrase book, much better than most of its kind. Tommy, on the morning after his arrival, was able to ask a chambermaid for hot water, a waiter for breakfast and another man to clean his boots. Most phrase books are no use for that sort of thing. They only tell you how to say "Good morning, honored sir. Will you give me the pleasure of dining at my house today, bringing your gracious lady with you?" and things like that which the tourist seldom wants.

While he drank his coffee and ate the wretched little roll which the German hotel-keepers give to guests who breakfast in their bedrooms, he opened his dispatch box and counted his money.



At This Moment Janet Church Came Along the Corridor, Wearing a Pink Dressing Gown, a Pair of Blue Slippers and a Very Ribbony Cap.

"It was the first time in my life," he told he, "that I'd been a millionaire, and I liked the feeling. In fact, I gloated."

I do not wonder. The German notes are most opulent looking and impressive things, far superior in size and texture to the flimsy little scraps of paper which England has to be contented with. There are large gray notes, as big as half sheets of note paper, worth a thousand marks each. There are beautiful thick notes for one hundred marks. Even the little "funf" markers are impressive. All Tommy's notes were perfectly new and spotlessly clean. Nobody could have helped fingering them lovingly and reverently. It was a delight to count them.

But it is poor fun feeling that you are a millionaire all by yourself in a hotel bedroom. Tommy realized that he ought to be out-of-doors enjoying himself and getting some solid good for his money. He finished his coffee, swallowed the last morsel of bread, and began to shave.

Then came a knock at the door. Tommy said "Herein." His face was covered with thick lather of soap, and he did not care for opening his mouth very wide; but he spoke quite distinctly. And he was sure that "Herein" was the German for "come in." He had said it six time already, twice for each of the three servants, and it had been understood. This time the man outside simply went on knocking. Tommy went to the door and opened it.

He saw Count Casimir, beautifully dressed, smiling and bowing politely. Casimir is always beautifully and appropriately dressed. I have seen him at the start of a boar hunt in Lystria with a tall red feather sticking up in the front of his cap and boots that would have suited one of Prince Rupert's cavalier troopers. I have seen him in evening clothes, and nothing more perfect could be found in a drawing room comedy on the London stage. I did not see him that morning in the Adlon hotel. But Janet Church has given me a description of his clothes. He wore a pale gray suit with a faint blue line in it, and creases in all the right places, a mauve tie harmonized with the blue line, a waistcoat—I must leave a blank here and get Janet to tell me about the waistcoat again. Tommy was in crumpled gray pajamas and his face was soapy.

Count Casimir presented his card. Tommy read the name on it—Casimir Istvan Graf—but was not much enlightened. He would if he could have read what was printed under the name. It was a large card, much larger than the visiting cards used by ladies in England, and there were four lines of small print on it, no doubt a description of Count Casimir's position in society. Unfortunately, these were in a language which Tommy had never seen before. It seemed a very queer language. There were curious curly accents over the consonants. The letter X appeared with unusual frequency. There were several R's with their faces turned the wrong way, looking very much as if some one had lifted them up, turned them over and set them down the wrong way. The same thing had happened to a couple of N's and there was a B with a curious little horn attached to it. Tommy could read Greek. He had a nodding acquaintance with the Hebrew alphabet and could distinguish between German capital B's and V's. Count Casimir's language was none of these.

"I bid you welcome," said Count Casimir. "In the words of your great Shakespeare, I say, 'All's well that ends well.'"

"I'm afraid," said Tommy politely, "that there is some mistake."

At this moment Janet Church came along the corridor, wearing a pink dressing gown, a pair of blue quilted slippers and a very ribbony cap. She was on her way to a distant bath. She saw Casimir, erect and beautiful—he is a very good looking man—in front of Tommy's door. She also saw Tommy, with the lather beginning to dry on his face.

Janet had been three days in Berlin, worrying the consul and the secretaries in the embassy for permission to go on to Megalia. She had not received my letter about Emily's lost curate. Indeed, she never did receive it. It reached Berlin after she had gone away and was finally returned to me.

Some women would have hurried on, turning their heads the other way. Tommy was in his pajamas. She herself was most imperfectly clothed. But Janet does not suffer from modesty and she loves interfering in other people's business. She calls this being helpful, and believes it to be virtuous.

"Can I," she said, "be of any assistance to you? I speak German fluently."

Casimir turned, put his heels together and bowed to her. Then he kissed her hand. Janet, in a red dressing gown and boudoir cap, must have been a surprising and rather a disgusting sight. But Casimir's manners are as perfect as his clothes. He would have bowed as politely and kissed her hand with the same elegant devotion if she had stepped straight out of her bath to be helpful.

"Thanks," said Tommy, "just tell this gentleman, will you, that there's some mistake. Most likely they've sent him up to the wrong room. I'm not the man he wants to see."

Janet made a long speech in German. Casimir answered her with a still longer speech. Janet replied to that, and Casimir, with an immense flow of language, answered her. Tommy declares that they talked to each other for ten minutes. Then Janet turned to him.

"He says his name is Count Istvan Casimir."

Tommy is the victim of a mistake which appears to have immense possibilities. Are they pleasant?

That Spirits Walk Earth Is a Universal Belief

The belief that dead persons make their reappearance on the earth is, according to an author, universal among all the ancient races.

The Eskimos say the spirit exhibits the same form and shape as the body it belonged to, but of a more subtle and ethereal nature.

The Tonga islanders believe that the human soul is the finer part of the body, the essence that can pass out, as does the fragrance from a flower.

The Greenland seers describe the spirit as pallid, soft and intangible.

Doctor Churchward knows some people now living who possess the gift of seeing and communicating with their departed friends, who never leave them night or day. He says:

"But these good spirits cannot speak so that one can hear them; they cannot make noises, nor can you take photographs of them.

"Spirits are composed of pure corpuscles in the likeness and form of their previous earthly state as humans, only much more beautiful. They cannot leave Paradise without divine permission."—Montreal Family Herald.

Reaching for the Mirage

The cloud's silver lining, however, is apparent only to those who stand a great way off.—Duluth Herald.

POULTRY

CHECK BLACKHEAD IN TURKEY FLOCK

Every year blackhead in turkey flocks becomes a little more common, and every year the losses from the dread disease are a little larger. And while no positive treatment has ever been discovered, a remedy is being used by hundreds of successful turkey growers that proves very satisfactory if used before the fowls are in the last stages of the disease, says a writer in Successful Farming.

A slight lameness is usually discernible in a turkey coming down with blackhead. The bird gradually grows weaker, refuses to eat, but drinks an unusual amount. Diarrhea is usually present, and when the disease is in an advanced stage, the droppings are usually a bright yellow. The wings and tail are not held up. The head is drawn close to the body.

Sometimes the flesh parts of the head turn a bluish-black. If you are not sure whether it is blackhead or some other ailment that is affecting the bird, it will be wise to make a post-mortem examination. If the liver is covered with black or gangrene spots it will not be necessary to look further for the trouble. You may be sure blackhead is the trouble, and begin treatment accordingly.

Powdered ipecac may be used either as a remedy for blackhead or as a preventive. We prefer to use it as a preventive, as any disease is better prevented than cured. When blackhead enters our flock it usually causes the greatest losses before the poults are six weeks of age. For this reason we begin feeding the ipecac to the poults as soon as we begin feeding mash. It is fed in a wet mash—one teaspoonful of powdered ipecac to enough mash for 20 turkeys—twice a week. The same amount is given to the young birds and the mature fowls. This treatment will prevent blackhead entering your flock, though the youngsters are allowed to range with the older birds, and on infected ground.

If blackhead has entered your flock before treatment is begun, the sick birds should be fed half a teaspoonful of powdered ipecac in wet mash (for each bird) for three successive days. If the disease is not in the advanced stage it will not be difficult to remedy, but if the fowls are nearly dead when the treatment is begun, you cannot expect a large percentage of cures.

Heretofore, the only cure for blackhead has been to move to new, uninfected land, and this is usually only effective for the first season.

Do You Remember?

The following questions which are put to the record flock keepers of Iowa by the Iowa State college are pertinent suggestions to all poultry keepers. "Do You Remember?" they say:

When milk ever spoiled the fertility or hatchability of an egg?

When a chick didn't make good growth when it has milk in its ration?

What a time you used to have getting a lot of early chicks hatched with hens?

When you had a mongrel flock and wished some one would come along and get you started with a good breed?

The time you had raising chicks on the old ground that had been used for 25 years without a change?

How your chicks acted when they were affected by worms and coccidiosis?

How you tried to fight internal parasites without new ground?

Poultry Facts

Milk in some form should be kept before chicks during the first month.

One of the things that our culling should do is to weed out the persistent sitters. The heavy layers do not waste time in broodiness.

Many chicks are not getting enough green feed. If they are not on range carry sod to them or fix up a feeder and give them cut alfalfa or clover hay. You'll be surprised how they will eat it.

Wheat treated with copper carbonate to prevent stinking smut is not harmful to chickens, at least if fed for only a short time. Neither is it harmful to hogs, when fed in small amounts.

* * *

Sunlight and cod liver oil are said to prevent leg weakness. So will getting the chicks onto the ground, either outside the brooder house or on chunks of sod placed on the brooder floor.

Remember that heavy, sudden rains and floods do great damage to young poultry which are not given brooder housing under the right conditions. A house set low and open to rats and vermin is a menace to the profits of the flock.

Poultry has been an important source of income during the last few years, as many farmers will testify.

If you have eggs for sale from pure bred, healthy, birds, do not whine at the low market price for eggs. Advertise and sell them for hatching purposes. And don't spoil the up-to-date breeders' business by trading your eggs for common-stock eggs with your neighbors. They may get miffed if you refuse them; but the refusal is fair to the progress of the breeding business.

Trial by Jury to Be Instituted in Japan

Japan is going to introduce a system of trial by jury. Preparatory to making this departure the Department of Justice has various measures under way, including the sending abroad of many judiciary officials to study the system in other countries. Many of these officials are already in America and England inspecting the manner in which jury trials are conducted. Two courts each for trial by jury will be established in Tokyo, Osaka, Hiroshima, Fukuoka, Kumamoto, Kagoshima, Nagasaki, Nagoya, Sendai, Sapporo and Niigata and one each at other law court centers. Each of these special courts will have a lodging place for juries to be housed during trials. Establishing the new courts and building the lodging houses involves quite an item of expenditure, in addition to which will be the cost of a good deal of propaganda to let the country understand the system.

Art Masterpiece Found

An extremely rare wax portrait, in high relief, of Prince Francesco dei Medici, done by the celebrated Sixteenth century artist, Benvenuto Cellini, has been presented to the San Marco museum by Guiseppe Val Geppi, a widely known Florentine collector. The work, considered one of Cellini's masterpieces, is supposed by art students to have been executed between 1568 and 1570. It represents the prince in the age of adolescence, and is well preserved.

Unhurt by Time

Workmen clearing away the basement of a Hopkinton (Iowa) building that was wrecked by fire some 25 years ago, recently found a carbon filament electric lamp bulb that had been in use in the building before the fire. This lamp bulb was at once taken to a nearby garage, screwed into a lamp socket and lighted up just as if there had been no fire nor a 25-year vacation spent Rip Van Winkle-like in the debris of the ruined building.

Watch Cuticura Improve Your Skin. On rising and retiring gently smear the face with Cuticura Ointment. Wash off Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water. It is wonderful what Cuticura will do for poor complexions, dandruff, itching and red, rough hands.—Advertisement.

Seemed Wasted Time

Whistling merrily at his employment, an expert workman busied himself in combining bits of feather, horsehair, hooks and red flannel. There came along a visitor, evidently one from the rural districts, who viewed these operations with palpable astonishment. The workman explained that he was making artificial flies. The stranger's comment was expressive.

"Gosh, aren't there enough real ones in season?"

Sunday School Record

James Frankenfield, a member of the Grace Lutheran Sunday school at Bethlehem, Pa., has a record of attending Sunday school every Sunday for 19 years without an absence. He braved blizzards and disregarded illness to be in his seat every Sunday during that period. Rush Schnable of the same church is a runner-up for the record with 17 years without an absence.

Man Pays for Old Prank

E. L. Oliver of Kenmare, Ohio, has sent a $2 bill to City Manager H. G. Otis of Clarksburg, W. Va., with a letter of explanation that it was to pay for a street lamp which he had broken some years ago. Oliver said the prank had been on his conscience for some time and he wanted to clear himself of the worry.

Some say that dead men tell no tales but it is not true. While the voice of LaFollette is stilled in death, his personality will still live on guiding his followers in a way fittingly expressed in another day by a writer of scripture who said "He being dead yet speaketh." The same daily papers which a few months ago were ridiculing his ideas have united in admitting that even his bitterest enemies could find nothing wrong in his personal life, a compliment which brings to life the statement of Pilate when in speaking of Christ he said "I find no fault in this man." But they crucified Christ on a cross while they crucified LaFollette on the altar of public opinion representing him as a crank, a radical, a fanatic. Even now the A. P. gives him no credit for the things he accomplished. It does not explain how he submitted thirty proposals for the Republican platform in 1908 and how the party turned him down but today after only seventeen years, twenty nine of the thirty proposals have been enacted into laws of the land. "Fighting Bob" was a prophet as well as a statesman.

Obituary

Catherine Matilda Morehouse was born in Litchfield, Hillsdale county, Michigan, May 21, 1844, and departed this life Wednesday morning June 17th, from her home in North Adams

She was one of eight children born to Philetus and Julia A. Morehouse, hardy pioneers, who coming to the unbroken forests, helped to make Michigan one of the richest American commonwealths. Her childhood home was christian, after a type so characteristic of those early days when the Bible was revered and the family altar had its own essential place among the furnishings of the home. While a child she gave her heart to God and her hand to the Methodist church in a faith which sustained her to the last hour of her earthly pilgrimage.

She was married to Ezra L. Tiffany in 1862 and for sixty years they shared together the joys and sorrows of a happy wedded life. Four children came to bless their union: Ella R., Minnie B., Charles A. and Frank L. all of whom survive her, except the oldest daughter, Ella, who passed away in young womanhood, leaving two children, Albert A. and Clyde Haskell, to whom she gave the same motherly devotion which her own children enjoyed. Her untiring devotion to her aged father (also a member of her own household for several years) only illustrates the unfaltering love to which her mother heart rssponded for every call for motherly sympathy. The years brought to her a full share of life's sorrows.

In 1885, her first-born, Ella, (Mrs. Oliver Haskell) just budding into motherhood, departed, and in 1916, the death of Albert Haskell, Ella's son, and two years later that of Pyrl, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Tiffany at Camp Grant Illinois, in the service of his country, brought sorrow to the broken family circle.

Then came the crowning sorrow of her life, in the departure of her companion with whom for more than half a century, she had walked in loving comradeship. Only an unfaltering trust in the Friend Who had never forsaken nor forgotten her. would have sustained her but to Him she clung more firmly as the evening shadows lengthened.

She had given freely her unstinted love to make others happy and a large number of devoted friends with a loyal, loving circle of children and grand-children with sad interest watched her failing strength, the sign of inevitable decline.

With all that pitiless disease could do to undermine her bodily strength, her mind, memory affection and will held its place with a tenacity that astonished all who came to her bedside. Her faith in the unfailing love and sympathy of God and human friends never faltered. Her days and nights of almost constant pain were cheered by many messages and tokens of sympathy from neighbors and friends from far and near. After several hours of intense suffering, just at the opening of a new day, surrounded by her loving sons and daughter, her release came. "She was not, for God had taken her"

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep
From which none ever wake to (weep"

There still survive her beside her sons and daughter, six grandchildren and four great grandchildren, one brother, Abram G. Morehouse and one sister, Sarah Shults, both of North Adams.

The burial services were held from the family residence on W. Main street Friday afternoon, the Rev. John Sheehan, of Niles, Michigan, a former North Adams pastor, assisted by the Rev. M. D. Carrel, conducting the service. Mrs. Nellie Kenrick and her son beautifully rendered two duets "After the Shadows" and "He Knows, It Is Enough" accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Tena Wamsley. The ladies of the O. E. S. very impressively conducted the services at the grave, using the burial service of the order. A large number of friends from near and far were in attendance.

Card of Thanks

We desire to express our gratitude to friends who so generously remembered us with words of sympathy and deeds of kindly service and gifts of flowers at the death and burial of our beloved mother and grand-mother, Mrs. Catherine Tiffany. We would especially mention the comforting words of Rev. Sheehan; the very appropriate duets rendered by Mrs. Nellie Kenrick and son, Harold, and Mrs. Tena Wamsley. The beautiful flowers from individual donors and from the various orders; and we would make special mention of the closing service at the grave conducted by members of the O. E. S. with which order Mrs. Tiffany was identified.

ROLAND BENGE

OUR ONE HUNDRED FORTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY

TOMORROW (July 4th) the nation celebrates its one hundred and forty-ninth birthday. Almost a century and a half has melted away since those men with hearts of oak stood together in old Independence Hall at Philadelphia, and signed the precious document which made us a nation. For aught they knew it might have been their death warrant. They took their own initiatives. A Tory or a Patriot meant life or death as the balance swayed. When Washington took command of the Continental army at Cambridge the thirteen colonies had no guaranty of their existence, Munitions, clothing and provisions they had not. 'Twas a long far call from Lexington and Concord io Yorktown; one more Long Island and a second Valley Forge might have changed the map of this country like the kaliedoscopic pattern of a quilt. It is assumed that the Mighty Ruler of the Universe takes care of His chosen ones. He saw to it that devoted souls like Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson and Patrick Henry lived and had their being. Way down on the quaint little island of the West Indies He caused to be born Alexander Hamilton (the conqueror) a wonderful statesman. At Braddock's defeat He stemmed the Indian bullets that would have cut short the immortal career of George Washington.

This seems like a fantastic pipe dream yet it may be a fact. If this be true that the Creator fore-ordained, what would we not give to know His plans for 100 years hence.?

The next cottage prayer meeting occurs Tuesday evening July 7th, at the home of Henry Comley. Everyone invited, as this is strictly undenominational.

Between 20 and 30 members of Mr, Hunt's S. S. class enjoyed an outing at Baw Beese Lake the past week. Probably the biggest event of the week was the big fish caught by Doris Hill and Gladys Holkins which weighed 2½ pounds. Altho' there were several fish dinners this was the best of all. The group were very grateful to those who expressed their interest by paying visits to us while there. Especially do we wish to thank the following for their surprise treats: Mrs. M. Kempton, Mr. and Mrs. Eber Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Eggleston. The young people are already looking forward to next summer when they hope to repeat the happy event.

We heard a gent discussing the Advocate the other evening charging that we were a parrot and a phonograph, merely re-producing what other papers printed. Well, we presume this boy was locoed or suffered with horse pistol dementia or had his dates mixed. As a matter of fact the Advocate can't change anything that happens—and if we happen to print something which the other paper contained it is no indication we are a phonograph. We generally find ourselves so busy correcting dates that we have no time to manufacture stuff if we would. For instance a certain paper is speaking of a worthy citizen who had passed away from our midst manufactured two sons for him when he never had a son in his life, and also named them. Also at another time this sheet spoke of our enterprising egg dealer as Mr. Crates which was totally unnecessary as Mr. Crater has plenty of egg crates and he don't need 'em. No, Brother, we don't phonograph and we never manufacture stuff! Your last supply of cheap propaganda has gone to your head. Better reef in your main jib boom.

BY GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM

COPYRIGHT BY BOBBS-MERRILL CO. WNU Service.

AN UNKNOWN VISITOR

SYNOPSIS. — In London the teller of the story of the adventures of "King Tommy," and known hereafter as "Uncle Bill," is informed by Lord Norheys, son of an old friend, that Lord Troyte, head of the British foreign office, Norheys' uncle, has a scheme to make him (Norheys) king of Lystria, in central Europe, through marriage to Calypso, daughter of King Wladislaws, deposed monarch of that country. A financier, Procopius Cable, knows there is oil in profusion in Lystria, and with an English king on the throne the output could be secured for England. Norheys, in love with a stage dancer, Viola Temple, is not enthusiastic over the proposition. The patriarch, Menelaus, highest ecclesiastical dignitary in Lystria, is heartily in favor of the restoration of the monarchy, and Cable has generously financed the sentiment. Calypso is making a living dancing in the "Mascotte," Berlin cabaret. Norheys refuses to entertain the idea of giving up Viola Temple, to whom he is secretly engaged. "Uncle Bill's" sister Emily urges him to secure a passport from Lord Troyte for a certain Janet Church, strong-minded female who wants to visit Lystria in the interests of a society for world peace. Janet Church leaves for Berlin. "Uncle Bill" is again appealed to by his sister to find a certain curate (name not given) who has left his parish in Ireland for a visit to Berlin, and cannot be found. Lord Norheys and Viola Temple disappear from London. Procopius Cable receives information that Norheys, with the princess, has left there on his way to Lystria, but Norheys appears with the former Viola Temple, now his wife. The question is, "Who is the man who has gone to Lystria with the Princess Calypso?" Casimir introduces himself, and Janet Church, vainly seeking from the British consulate a passport to Lystria, becomes acquainted with the two men in the Adlon hotel.

That seemed a small result of so much conversation, and gave Tommy very little fresh information. The Casimir and the Istvan he had read on the visiting card, though in reversed order. Graf he took to be the German for count.

"Tell him," he said, "that there's a mistake. He can't possibly want to see me. Ask him who he does want, and then get him to go down again and find the number of his friend's room."

Janet started again. So did Casimir. This time they talked for a quarter of an hour, fast and emphatically. There is nothing in the world so irritating as hearing two people talk to each other in an unknown language when you know they are talking about your affairs. Tommy is the best tempered of men, but even he began to feel impatient.

"He says," said Janet, turning to Tommy at last, "that he's sure your name is Norheys."

"Is that all he said?"

"That's all," said Janet.

"Well, then, all I can say is that I don't wonder the Germans lost the war. If it takes them half an hour to say 'What's your name?' they can't expect to get on at war or anything else. It must be an utterly rotten language."

Janet, who hated all Germans with a passionate intensity during the war, has been developing a strong affection for them since the peace was signed. She cannot bear, now, to hear a word said against them and has transferred her dislike to the French. When Tommy insulted the German language she turned away and stalked down the corridor toward the bath.

Casimir has an amazing facility in quotation.

"'And the imperial votaress passed on,'" he said, "'In maiden meditation, fancy free.' Please."

Casimir's English accent was by no means perfect. Tommy, though he ought to have recognized Shakespeare's compliment to Queen Elizabeth, seemed to have thought that the count was still talking German. He darted into his room and picked up his phrase book. He distinctly remembered that he had somewhere seen the sentence "Please go away." That was, as I have said, a very good phrase book. "Please go away" is a thing which the traveler in a foreign land constantly wants to say to beggars, extortionate cabmen, guides, touts, and officials who want to look at passports. Tommy grabbed the book, turned over the pages quickly, and came to the sentence he wanted.

Unfortunately, the next sentence in the book was "Please sit down." Tommy, running his eyes hurriedly from the English to the German column, picked up the wrong phrase.

"Bitte setzen sie sich," he said.

Casimir could not very well sit down on the carpet in the corridor. So took Tommy's words to be an invitation to enter the bedroom. Tommy stood exactly in the middle of the doorway. Casimir, bowing very politely, tried to pass him. Tommy suddenly recollected that all his money, his piles of German marks, lay on the table in the middle of the room. A horrible explanation of Casimir's presence suggested itself. The man had made no mistake. He had not been sent to the wrong room by the clerk in the hotel office. He was a hotel thief. Tommy had heard of such people. They are immensely daring, immensely clever, and they adopt all sorts of ruses. They are often well dressed. They are always plausible.

Tommy winked knowingly at Casimir to show that he understood the situation and cherished no ill-feeling. Then he firmly shut the door in his visitor's face.

CHAPTER VIII

An hour later Tommy stepped from the elevator into the great central hall of the hotel. He had discarded his clerical stock. He wore a light blue tie instead. He was still a young man, only a little more than twenty-six, not long enough in Holy Orders to have his profession recognizably written on his face. A bystander, interested in his appearance, might have guessed him to be a young barrister, or perhaps a clerk in one of the higher branches of the civil service. But no one appeared to be the least interested in Tommy's appearance, or to care what he was or what he did.

The large hall was full of people. Hotel porters in red jackets wheeled barrows of luggage in and out. Pageboys, as thickly decorated with buttons as any of their kind anywhere in the world, went to and fro wailing the numbers of the rooms of the guests whom they sought—guests whom visitors had come to see or for whom telephone calls had been made. Fussy travelers, newly arrived and filled with a sense of their own importance, crowded round the desk of the reception clerk and demanded rooms. Self-possessed elderly men, mostly fat and often Jewish, lounged in deep chairs with cigars in their mouths and surveyed the scene through half-closed eyes. American tourists eddied round the newspaper stalls in the corner of the hall and clamored for the New York Herald. It was in their eyes a sign of the well nigh inconceivable stupidity and incompetence of all European peoples that the supply of New York Heralds was insufficient to meet their demands. The desk of a harassed woman who sold concert and theater tickets was besieged by ladies who did not know exactly what they wanted but hoped to secure seats at some agreeable entertainment by asking questions in bad German. A boy, rather older than the pages, stood at the swinging glass door and drove it round on its pivot with vigorous pushes. He drove it faster and faster as more and more people passed in and out. His hope was that some time in the course of the morning he would succeed in hitting a slowly moving passer with the following wing of the door. Those who entered and left the hotel approached the whirling door very much in the spirit of medieval sportsmen who rode at the quintain.

All this delighted Tommy. He had hitherto led a quiet and uneventful life, seldom disturbed by anything more exciting than a Sunday school treat. He watched the moving figures, gazed at the strange faces, listened to a babel of different languages, and felt that this was exactly what he had come to Berlin to enjoy. For some time he was content simply to stand watching and listening. Then he began to wonder what he had better do next. He had the whole day before him. His breast pocket was stuffed with money. He had a great city to explore.

Before leaving home he had read up Baedeker's Guide to Berlin, an old copy borrowed from my sister Emily. He knew that there was a street called Unter den Linden which he ought to see, a park called the Tier Garten, an avenue called the Sieges Allee, several churches and museums. There were theaters, picture galleries and restaurants, all duly named and the nature indicated by the worthy Baedeker. At the moment he felt more attracted toward a restaurant. His breakfast had been very light, and though it was only ten o'clock, he felt hungry. He wondered whether it would be possible to demand luncheon in a Berlin restaurant at that hour without exciting the derision of the waiters.

He felt a light touch on his arm and looked round. Count Casimir stood beside him.

"Just you clear off, like a good man," said Tommy. "I've had enough of you for one morning."

His mind was still full of his hotel theory, and he was quite determined not to be robbed by any plausible stranger. He turned away and walked across the hall toward the row of telephone boxes. He had no intention of telephoning to any one. Indeed, he knew no one in Berlin to whom he could telephone, nor could he have given a number in German. He merely wished to escape from Casimir.

But Casimir was not an easy man to shake off. He followed Tommy.

"You wish to go to the Mascotte tonight," he said. "Please?"

The word "Please" was evidently in constant use in Casimir's language. His repetition of it in English gave a curious effect of extreme politeness to his conversation.

Tommy had heard of the Mascotte. My nephew, Emily's eldest boy, was in Berlin for some time as a subordinate member of the inter-allied mission of control. He knew all there was to know about the night life of the city. It is a supper place, "d—d expensive," but the dancing was "top hole." It was not the sort of dancing which the censors of the London county council would approve, but it was "top hole" and "not too, you know, only rather more so than you'd see at home."

"Please, you will visit the Mascotte."

Casimir nodded and smiled in a very confidential manner, as if he and Tommy shared a secret which no one else in the world knew anything about. Tommy revised his opinion of the man. He was not a hotel thief. He was a tout, engaged in securing customers for the Mascotte supper room. Tommy had heard of such people. He had no intention of putting himself into the hands of one of them.

"She will be there, naturally," said Casimir, "and"—another quotation, this time disagreeably suggestive to Tommy's mind—

"Journeys end in lovers meeting,
Every wise man's son doth know."

This was going too far. Tommy meant to enjoy himself on his holiday. He had discarded his clerical collar in order to do so more freely, but he had no wish to pursue unknown ladies into night clubs. In order to get rid of Casimir finally he stepped into the nearest telephone box.

It was already occupied, and, since a telephone box is always a very small thing, he bumped into a lady who held the receiver to her ear. She was so intent on what she was doing that she took no notice of Tommy. He most unwillingly heard what she was saying.

"Then let me tell you, young man, that there'll be trouble. Lord Edmund Troyte distinctly promised that my passport would be ready for me. Yes? What's that? I've been to the consulate three times and I'm going again. The consul is totally incompetent and his clerks are rude. It's your business. What? Yes. I say it's your business. You're the third secretary, you say. That makes no difference. It's your business to see about that passport.

"What on earth are you doing there and who are you?"

Janet Church turned at last to Tommy, who had bumped into her again. She was fully dressed this time and the light in the telephone box was dim. But he recognized her at once as the lady who had stood talking German in the corridor. He also realized that she was in an exceedingly bad temper. Casimir, with his suggestion of strange lady-loves at the Mascotte, was bad enough. Janet Church, thirsting for the blood of the third secretary, was worse. Tommy left the telephone box hurriedly.

Casimir was waiting for him outside.

"Please," he said, "I have engaged a table for you at the Mascotte. It is catalogued—no, registered, no, I remember, you say booked, for the Graf von Norheys, please."

"I don't exactly know what a Graf is," said Tommy, "but whatever it is, I'm not one."

"Please?" said Casimir. "Ah, I see. If it were possible—in France, yes. M. le Marquis. There is no difficulty. But here. Excellenz perhaps. Or Prinz. Otherwise there is only Graf. It will not be understood if I catalogue the table for Herr Marquis. As your poet Shakespeare says, 'As you like it.'"

And He Never Came Back

Poor and sad, a tired-looking individual entered the shanty where the workmen were eating their dinners. He was carrying a red tin can.

"Hey, comrades," he sighed, holding out a hand by way of salutation. "Look at this tin of powder I picked up this morning. I guess I'll blow myself up with it and so end my troubles here and now."

"Cut that sort of talk and clear out," ordered the foreman.

But the man addressed paid no attention. He cast one glance around the shanty, then walked deliberately to the stove, opened the door and thrust the can inside.

A shriek of dismay followed this action and a moment later the place was empty.

Ten minutes later, when the runaways returned, they found the can reposing peacefully on the fire. The tired-looking individual had gone. So had their dinners and other of their possessions.

When Barrett Wendell Was Roused to Anger

For all his scholarly dignity, Barrett Wendell, Harvard professor, now and then lost his temper and especially at football games. In his biography, M. A. DeWolfe Howes recalls an occasion when Doctor Wendell and his daughter were greatly annoyed by an excited fan directly in front of them, who kept leaping up and cutting off their view.

When protests proved of no avail, Wendell upraised his professorial cane and brought it crashing down on the man's head, breaking his hat.

A roar of laughter went up from the delighted students who witnessed the incident, increasing when the man turned around shouting furiously:

"Who did that?"

"I did," replied Wendell calmly. "Come out and I'll buy you a new hat."

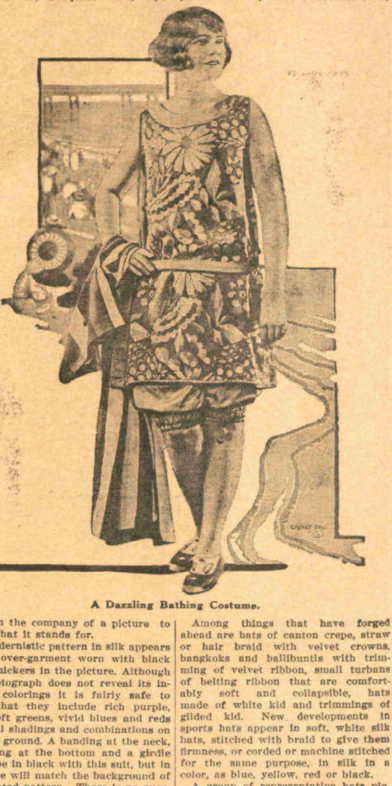
They exchanged cards and were gone from the game long enough to make the necessary purchase.

Knew Value of Rifle

The Arab caravan men who used trade across the Sahara through wastes patrolled by robber tribes had a proverb which told a deal of truth. "Without doubt," they said, "Allah is great, and Mohammed is his prophet but Sidi Vinster (Mr. Winchester) is the trader's real friend."

COLORFUL BATHING COSTUMES; SUMMER MILLINERY TURNS BACK

HOW would the puzzled fashion reporter be able to tell about the latest things in bathing suits if it were not for the resourcefulness of silk manufacturers? Some keen-minded maker of silks has hit upon the word "modernistic" to describe the new patterns in printed silks—it refers to the bold, unusual, vividly colored and glowing designs which are liked for bathing and beach suits and negligees. Nothing in the sky above, the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth is just like them—hence "modernistic" is a very adequate word, especially in the company of a picture to show what it stands for.



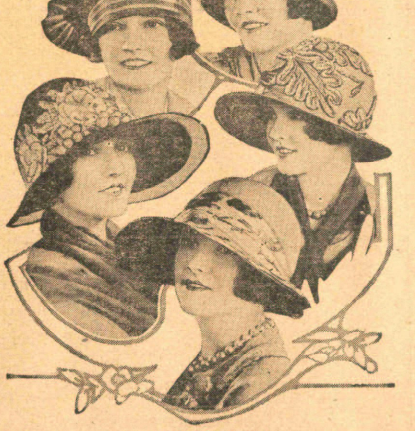
A Dazzling Bathing Costume.

A modernistic pattern in silk appears in the over-garment worn with black satin knickers in the picture. Although the photograph does not reveal its intricate colorings it is fairly safe to guess that they include rich purple, gold, soft greens, vivid blues and reds in artful shadings and combinations on a black ground. A banding at the neck, a binding at the bottom and a girdle would be in black with this suit, but in any case will match the background of the printed pattern. There is no question of the attractiveness of these new beach suits. Flourishing right along with them are black suits having only a little color introduced in bindings of gold, copenhagen blue or white.

Real swimming suits also divide their allegiance between dark and light colors. Tights fastening on the shoulder and having skirts looped on are made of pure worsted in purple, orange, royal blue, tan, bright green and in navy and black. Capes and coats to be worn over suits are shown in terry cloth in Roman and other stripes and in rubberized cloth. The latter are often lined with terry cloth. The aspect of the beaches is bright and gay—and no one looks bedraggled in modernistic bathing clothes.

For once in her career restless woman seems to be satisfied with things as they are, in millinery. Except for the much increased proportion of all-white hats and hats in which white predominates, millinery displays continue to be made up of the beautiful headwear launched in spring and early summer. The small felt hat in pastel colors continues to sell like ice cream cones, with the white felt a close second. Large felt hats in light colors, hair braids and other light straws are demanded, showing that the minds of women are centered on midsummer headwear and that they are not so "uncertain, coy and hard to please" as they have sometimes been.

Among things that have forged ahead are hats of canton crepe, straw or hair braid with velvet crowns, bangkoks and ballibuntls with trimming of velvet ribbon, small turbans of belting ribbon that are comfortably soft and collapsible, hats made of white kid and trimmings of gilded kid. New developments in sports hats appear in soft, white silk hats, stitched with braid to give them firmness, or corded or machine stitched for the same purpose, in silk in a color, as blue, yellow, red or black.



Some of the Summer Hats.

A group of representative hats pictured here includes a small soft turban of black and colored ribbon, a felt hat with crepe facing and drapery, finished with a rhinestone ornament—at the upper right—a tagal straw below it with applique trimming of silk and braid. Opposite this is a hat of canton crepe and hair braid with flowers and fruit about the crown and below it a hair braid shape with drapery of figured chiffon. It is noticeable that the shapes are medium or small, conservative in lines and becoming.

Summer millinery is singing its swan song. These conservative models and the sheer, wide brimmed, picturesque hats of hair braid, lace or crepe, signify that the song is finished. White and light colored felt or fabric hats for sport or street wear provide the very last word.

Chiffon Hand Bag

A bag which reflects the vogue for printed materials is made of a printed chiffon handkerchief in the gayest colors. It is lined with silk and attached to a frame so that the four corners make a petal decoration.

Neat New Hats

Attractive hats to be worn between seasons are of satin or grosgrain ribbons arranged on the frame to give the effect of draped silk.

Bordered Silks for Frocks

Bordered silks have a distinct appeal, not only because of the fashion element but because of their practicability. It takes only a yard and a half of the material to make a frock and the result is extremely smart and becoming.

Buttons, Buttons

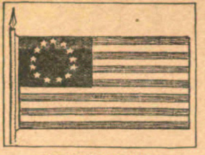
To Betsy Ross



The Betsy Ross Flag.

They came to you—those patriots—
when woman's aid was needed,
They asked an emblem of you in the midst of war's alarm,
As the knight of song and story
fought for fame in battle's glory,
And wore the veil his lady gave upon his good right arm.
Your swiftly snipping scissors for an instant did not lag,
And the hand that rocked the cradle
was the hand that made the flag.

No more the hand and arrows fluttered o'er the troops in conflict;
No more they fought together underneath the green pine tree;
And the spitting snake uplifted never-more its rattles shifted
In the cannon's belch sinister, as it warned "Don't tread on me!"
For the varied Continentals had a standard all their own,
When they fought beneath a banner that a woman's hand had sewn.

Ah, Betsy Ross, you little knew the honor that befell you,
That quiet day you labored in your little homestead, where Your nimble needle flying sewed a nation never dying—
That the little constellation that you
clipped and fashioned there
Would wax in greater numbers from the cradle of its birth,
And carry forth its message to the very ends of earth.

—Harlowe R. Hoyt.

Lafayette

When Lafayette visited America a hundred years ago as the guest of the nation his part in the great adventure of the American colonies lay nearly half a century in the background of his life. When he had taken leave of us he had left behind him a little group of commonwealths, exhausted by war and distracted by mutual jealousies and mistrust. On his return in 1824 he found them bound into a vigorous, expanding nation, basking in the sunshine of an "era of good feeling."

It is hard for us to realize that in 1777 it seemed nothing out of place for the Continental congress to bestow a major general's commission upon a nineteen-year-old French aristocrat, incapable of giving an intelligible command in English. It was, however, quite in accord with the custom of the time so to burden young shoulders with weighty responsibilities, especially if they were patrician shoulders. Perhaps the practice was justified by the precocity that was characteristic of the age. More of the statesmen of the Revolution were under forty years of age than over it. At nineteen Alexander Hamilton, born in the same year as Lafayette, had a profound and practical knowledge of the principles of government and finance. Across the sea William Pitt was about to enter upon the amazing parliamentary career that was to make him prime minister of England at twenty-four.

Lafayette Monument, Washington.

How was it that Lafayette, heir to an ancient and enormously wealthy house, should have become at a period in life when the modern boy is leaving high school a sincere and ardent champion of the "rights of man"? In almost any of his compatriots the motive might well have been caprice or a love of adventure. In Lafayette it was passion for human liberty.

It is fitting, therefore, that when we think of the help that France gave us in the Revolution we should symbolize it in the person of Lafayette. France acted from selfish motives, for England was her traditional enemy. Lafayette was whole-heartedly for the cause of the young republic.—Youth's Companion.

Revolutionary Uniforms

In 1779 congress authorized and directed the commander in chief to prescribe a uniform. Accordingly General Washington issued a general order from headquarters, New Windsor, October 2, 1779, which provided the following uniforms: New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut—Blue faced with white; buttons and linings white. New York and New Jersey—Blue, faced with buff; buttons and linings white. Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia—Blue, faced with red; buttons and linings white. North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia—Blue, faced with light blue; buttonholes edged with narrow white lace or tape; buttons and linings white. Artillery officers—Blue, faced with scarlet. Light dragoons—Blue, faced with white; buttons and lining white.

Vote Tuesday, July 21, for

Joseph L. Hooper

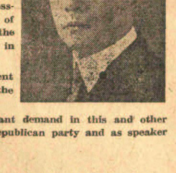
For Congress

Candidate for Nomination on the Republican Ticket at Special Primary to Fill Vacancy

Mr. Hooper grew up from childhood in Battle Creek. He made his own way to education through the public schools, through admission to the bar, and into a very successful law practice.

Serving vigorously and successfully as prosecuting attorney of Calhoun County, he was then the youngest man to hold that office in the state of Michigan.

He is one of the most eloquent and effective public speakers in the state.



He has been in almost constant demand in this and other states as a campaigner for the republican party and as speaker on civic and patriotic occasions.

He knows public issues.

He has been a powerful champion of constitutional government.

He has vigorously and constantly demanded law enforcement and respect for law.

In Calhoun county "Joe" Hooper has long had the enthusiastic friendship of men and women of every class, who admire his ability, his squareness and sincerity—and who repeatedly have urged him for position at Washington.

If sent to congress he will carry on the high record which the third district holds there. He will make no appeals to prejudice or misunderstanding; he will be the loyal and effective friend of good government, of intelligent progress—and he will be the square and dependable friend of the people of his district.

Men and women from every class and station of life, in Calhoun county, endorse "Joe" Hooper's candidacy to you.

Vote for him as the republican nominee at the primary, July 21.

Hooper for Congress Committee.

Watch Your Step

Some of the local boys who have for years followed the footsteps of their ancient and worthy progenitor Izaac Walton are now watching the game laws and they want to know what they can catch and what they can't, so here is a list of rhe laws up-to date in regard to fishing The game wardens in these parts are altogether too attentive to business for the comfort of the numerous jay birds who would like to fish, yet when all is said and done there are large quantities of fish dynamited and otherwise unlawfully taken. Following is the law. Cut this out and stick it in your pocket.

The connecting waters between the Great Lakes are classed as in land waters.

Hook and Line—Defined by law to be a single line or single rod and line with hook or hooks attached which held in the hand or under immediate control when being used for still fishing.

Casting and Trolling—Defined to mean a single line or single rod and line with hook or hooks attached or with a natural or artificial bait, not to exceed six inches in length and one or more hooks or gangs of hooks attached, to be used for casting or trolling for fish, and the method of capturing fish shall be by means of fish taking bait or hook in the mouth.

Grab Hooks, Snag Hooks, Set Lines and Night Lines—unlawful to use.

Ice Lines—Defined to be a single line with a single hook attached and five such lines may be used by one person during December, January, February and March for taking all kinds of fish, except the different kinds of trout, bass and wall eyed pike, through the ice.

Nets, excepting dip nets and minnow seines—Unlawful to use or have in possession within one half mile of any inland lake or stream.

Spearing and Dip Netting, Carp suckers, mullet and red sides may be taken in the streams and rivers by this means without artificial light during March and April in the lower peninsula, and from March 1st to May 15th in the upper peninsula, of Michigan. All kinds of fish except black bass, wall eyed pike and brook trout may be speared through the ice during January and February in each year.

Minnow Seine—Not more than twenty feet in length may be used for taking chubs, shiners, suckers dace and stone roller minnows from any of the rivers and streams not to exceed thirty feet in length and five feet in width may be used in inland lakes. Unlawful to transport or carry away minnows taken for bait from the waters of any trout stream.

Jack and all kinds of artificial lights, dynamite and all other explosive substances—Unlawful to use or have in possession on any of the inland waters or within one half mile thereof.

Wall eyed Pike, Blue Gills, Sun fish, Crappies and Sturgeon are now protected fish as well as all species of trout and bass. These fish cannot be bought and sold, and hotel proprietors and resort keepers are admonished that neiher these nor any other protected fish can be served to guests where a charge is made for the service, provided the fish caught by guests may be served to them at their request.

Firearms—Unlawful to use for taking any kind of fish in any of the waters of this State at any time

Black Bass and Wall eyed Pike Unlawful to take or have in possession more than a total of ten bass and may be composed of big or small mouth or either of the two species. Wall eyed pike, ten.

Blue Gills, Sunfish, Calico Bass White Bass, Rock Bass or Crappies Unlawful to take or have in possession more than a total of twenty five of each species.

Be sure your campfire is extinguished before you leave it.

They Are Filled

Major General Hale of Chicago reports that the quota for the 6th Corps Citizens Military Training Camp at Custer is now full—in fact it is over subscribed. This camp opens July 23rd and closes August 21st both at Custer and Camp Jefferson Missouri. The Major feels highly elated over the prospect and says it shows increasing popularity each year. There are some applications for next season of fellows too young to go in now. All that will be taken on now are simply supers to go as substitutes for those who may be called away by sickness or some other reason. This the Major thinks indicates a wonderful future for the nation. We think so to. When it is time to open another grand war we shall have a super-abundance of good timber more than half trained. It is possible we are following in the footsteps of poor old decrepit Germany which rode on high horses only to topple from its own clumsiness into oblivion.

So great is the faith of a large majority of our people in the general good intentions of the powers at Washington that we have been criticised severely for even intimating that we would ever see another war. We hope this is a chimera. We hope no more honest American blood will ever be shed to settle quarrels hatched up at Washington but it don't look good. Too much money is being expended on war aeroplanes and other fighting paraphernalia.

The Guggenheim Foundation

Possibly few of our readers ever heard of Senator John Simon Guggenheim of Colorado, who is heavily interested in mines throughout the west and is very rich. He and wife have recently set aside $3,000-000 for a revolving fund to assist in the education abroad of exceptionally well qualified but financially poor people, who wish to finish their courses along certain lines in Europe. The approximate amount allowed each person per year is $2,500 for actual expenses, and it is planned to send from 40 to 50 each year. Men or women who apply must show exceptional talent along their particular line of endeavor. They must have been in the work for a time and must have shown particular ability. It is expected that those engaged in the study of the fine arts will be more liable to take this endowment, as it is confessed the study of art must be finished in Europe, although other courses will be taken. This is the chance of a lifetime for any who can furnish the necessary credentials. Applicant must be necessarily sound in health and of good character, between the ages of 25 and 35 years.

Automobile Accident At Jonesville

The roster of auto mishaps is on the increase. Early last Saturday morning two machines collided near Allen on M-23, killing one person. We have not the particulers of the accident, but late Saturday evening two machiues came together on the streets of Jonesville, in front of the blacksmith shop of Harry Randolph. A car owned by Harmon Taylor of Hillsdale met a car owned by Mr. McCarty of Jonesville which was going east. For some reason the Taylor car turned to the left instead of the right. Three men were in it and the shock turned it over. Mr. Taylor was pinned underneath and suffered a broken collar bone, and when picked up was unconscious. He was taken to Dr. Fisk's office and patched up and latter to the hospital. His car was demolished The McCarty car suffered considerable damage, so saith the Hillsdale Daily.

But there is one important particular which the scribe missed. When Taylor was picked up a bottle of whisky was seen by a bystander who put it away expecting to turn it over to the authorities. After the muss was cleaned up the bystander was approached by the town marshal who demanded the bottle. The bystander said. "who are you?" and the officer gave his authority and took the bottle. Now so far as we know no report has yet been made of the whisky and at the present high price of this commodity there should be an explanation of where it went.. It is to be hoped the driver had not mixed it with gasoline.

The large acreage of alfalfa which Michigan growers are handling makes it imperative that some system of hay making be employed which will rapidly and economically put up hay of good quality.

Arrangements have already been made to conduct hay curing demonstrations in Branch, Van Buren Kalamazoo, Wexford and Antrim counties, and Crops Extension men at the State College expect that eight or ten additional demonstrations of the new curing system will be arranged before the season is over.

THE OLD WEST IN ACTION

All highways and byways this year lead enticingly to the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo, which is to be held for nine days, beginning August 15. By cut rate train, boat or automobile, with parties of friends made up to share the trip, thousands of tourists are expected to be transplanted into the atmosphere of the real West.

Chicago's new $5,000,000 stadium on Lake Michigan is to become the capitol of American sport through the efforts of the domestic and foreign commerce committee of the Association of Commerce.

The story of the roundup and the rodeo is the story of romance of the real West. Into the nine days of the Chicago event will be packed more daring feats and dynamic action than is the privilege of many to witness in a lifetime. Tex Austin, producer of the most successful cowboy contests, will organize and manage the Chicago spectacle. Cowboys, cowgirls and bulldoggers, champions all, and bronchos and longhorn steers which have scorned mastery, will fight out the battle royal for supremacy.

From the "brush" of the Southwest to the ranges of Canada, the challenge has passed among the buckaroos who have fought out old rivalries at the famous cowboy events in Cheyenne and Pendleton. Not only seeking the glory of victory, they also will compete for more than $30,000 in cash prizes put up by the Chicago association. This is the largest amount given anywhere this year for cowboy contests. "Outlaw" horses, called the worst on the ranges, already are under contract with Tex Austin. They can't be ridden, is the promise of their owners. Carloads of steers, conditioned through the summer into their greatest strength, will defy the wits of the "bulldoggers."

The stadium itself is the world's wonder work of architecture. Its massive colonnades look down upon a huge arena and tiers of seats for 75,000 persons. It is set in the ring of boulevards and parks and on the lake front, which have won for Chicago the title of the "vacation city."

The roundup and rodeo will solve your vacation problems, so tell Mother and Sister and the Kid Brother to quit fretting over the summer's plans and get ready for the thrills of their lives.

NO DAYLIGHT SAVING HERE

(Copyright by R. R. Doubleday.)

Many are the tricks resorted to by the "outlaw" horse to throw his rider. Pitching, bucking every second of the time he is in the arena, the broncho struggles fiercely to win the decision. No buckaroo must "show daylight" between himself and his saddle, or he is disqualified.

The sport of sports is the real cowboy contest, and titles for the leadership in riding, "bulldogging" and roping will go to the buckaroos and cowgirls who compete in the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo, which will bring nine days of frontier life to the metropolis beginning August 15. Tex Austin, famous for successful rodeos he has held, will direct the events.

THREE REAL CHAMPIONS

(Copyright by R. R. Doubleday.)

"Expert and daring" leaders in the great sport to which they have brought fame, are the cowgirls from the western ranges who will compete in the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo, to be held for nine days beginning August 15. Champions past and present, as well as new seekers after fame, will add thrills to the cowboy contests which will be presented in the new $5,000,000 stadium under the auspices of the Chicago Association of Commerce. A group of these cowgirls startled the staid Britisher when they appeared in the International Championship held by Tex Austin at Wembley, England, recently, and the same champions will compete in the Chicago spectacle. Austin is organizing the Chicago roundup and will manage it, and the $30,000 in prizes is the largest amount offered for any contest this year.

Consider The Cost

The other day we looked over an item concerning concrete road work and the more we read the more we mused. The question naturally occurred "Can we afford it?" and only the echos answered. Of course our main trunk lines must be paved, but the day is a long way off when all smaller lines and villages can pay for concrete construction, because of the terrific cost.

Harking back to the construction of M-34 between Jonesville and Hillsdale it will be recalled that the concrete had cost as high as $40,000 per mile and we marvel as to where all that money went, and God only knows where some of it came from in the shape of taxes! As far as the well-to-do farmers in the zones along the right-of-way are concerned, they can stand the levy without flinching, but what of the poorer class who own possibly a small home of a few acres upon which a frugal living only can be made with no surplus? The taxes insurance and running expense of these little homes eats it all, and where is the road levy to come from? In the case above cited a larger proportionate share of the levy came from one family rich as mud, the Becks, who happen to be unfortunate enough to own a lot of the land between the two towns, hence we hear little concerning the stringency of funds. Even at that, there is not much justice in it, since the citizens of Hillsdale with little if any, invested, will wear out the road, rather than the Becks.

A careful consideration of the problem gives the cost of concrete pavement right around $30,000 per mile, divided something like this for an eigheeen foot road bed with seven inches of concrete: 3.400 barrels of Portland cement, or 17 carloads; 1,100 cubic yards of gravel or sand; 1600 yards crushed stone, or 46 car-loads; Into this mixture must be dumped 30,000 gallons of water. Total weight of it all is 4.000 tons. Now is this all? Not by a long shot.

Before construction can begin 400 pounds of dynamite will be required to blast the rock and 340 tons of coal must be burned up to make the cement and 19 tons of gypsum would go into this. Now readers, this is approximately the cost of one mile of pavement, to which mtst be added the profits of the contractor. Do you want to enslave your grand-children by passing this expense on to them? We don't believe you do.

To Show Methods Of Modern Hay Making

The best and most modern hay making machinery will be shown farmers of different sections of Michigan this summer during a series of demonstrations to be put on by the M. S. C. extension forces

An interesting feature of the demonstrations will be the fact that the approved methods of the present day go back in many details to principles learned by the pioneers in hay making years ago. Better quality, it is said, can be secured by observing more carefully the lessons given by previous generations in this respect.

In the switch from hand hay making methods to machinery during the past quarter century, says H. C. Rather, crops extension man at the college, many of the advantages of old fashioned methods which resulted in hay of excellent leafiness, color, and aroma were lost. Now, however, modern machinery is available which will take the new mown hay as soon as it falls over the cutter bar. A left hand, curved tooth, side delivery rake which forms airy windrows, has been designed, and the State College has employed it in the making of several hundred tons of excellent alfalfa the past two years.

The Centennial celebration in Philadelphia again brought the Declaration to the minds of the people. The managers borrowed the precious paper and exhibited it in Independenee Hall, and many copies of it were made and sold at that time. From then on the Government at Washington has had charge of it and to-day it may be viewed in its specially prepared shrine in the Library of Congress.

And now what? We are living under its beneficent spirit, but few of us are conscious of it as a force in our daily living. We are about to celebrate another Fourth of July, and the thought of that celebration makes thoughtful Americans sad. There will be a great showing of flags. There will be parades of soldiers and the bands will play. The country will make holiday and the roads will be blocked with automobiles loaded with weary men and women and fretful children. The parks and meadows and the pleasant places in the woods will be strewn with the litter of the picnic baskets. All day long there will be the crackling and banging and hissing of the fireworks. Buildings will be burned, and children will be hurt and maimed. Here and there will be speeches and cheers, and in a few places there will be a heart throb of love of country and reconsecration to its service. So do we honor our great tradition. So do we hallow the spirit of the forefathers.

There must be a better way. There is a better way to keep alive the spirit of our Declaration, which is truly the soul of the American people, to-day. Theodore Roosevelt used to take his children apart to some lovely spot in the woods and read the precious paper to them, explaining its meaning, pointing out the beauty and the power, the unmisatkable meaning of each word so fitly chosen. To him it was an inspiration and a mandate. It was the faith of his fathers, the source of America's greatness. He intended that his children should not only be American, but consciously American.

He told them the stories of Jefferson and Franklin and Adams and Washington and the hosts of patriots who built the foundations of the land until they associated them with the life about them. They and their principles became household words. He made his children conscious of the underlying spirit of the document which served to establish freedom in this land and kindle its beginnings throughout the world. It is to this spirit, this conscious quality of Americanism, that I would dedicate the Fourth of July.

And just what does "truly American" mean?

To me it is the preservation to all men of what we have declared to be self evident rights: the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. If that means anything at all, it means tolerance, for each of us must be happy in his own way. It means that we respect the rights and the feelings of other people to the extent that we never intrude upon them, erring always upon the side of generosity. It means a decent respect for the people of the world, a helpful, understanding appreciation of their difficulties, a ready sympathy with their distresses. And most of all it means a dedication of each American to the principles of his faith as proclaimed by that Declaration.

This idea, this quality, this philosophy of living which we call the American is not gained by picnicking once a year. It must be taught our youth and be practised by them, as Roosevelt demonstrated in his own family.

When the flags rise on the morning of the Fourth, I would have them signal a day set apart for the realization of the spirit of America. I would take the children to the nearest shrine of patriotism and there tell the story of the struggle and sacrifice that was the price of this nation's life. I would have impressed upon them the duty of carrying on the crusade their forefathers began.

But the crowning glory of the day should be the reception of its new citizens gathered from the youth of the land. I would have in each town a gathering of those young folk who reached their twenty first birthday during the calendar year and confer the dignity of citizenship upon them with fitting ceremony.

There would be a speech, a short one, full of the spirit of the great occasion. Of course the there would be music. Not battle songs for this day. We are not a warlike people, and our new citizens are not to be baptised in war but in peace. The music must be great music that speaks of the theme of the day and thrills the hearts of the young listeners with its haunting message of love and service.

The time has come when citizenship in this country should no longer be proffered carelessly to any and all who have lived within its borders. It is a high honor to be proudly earned and as fittingly bestowed. We can no longer afford to be unconscious of our heritage, our plainly appointed duty. We and those who come after us should be American according to the Declaration of Independence, and consciously so. Surely the Fourth of July is a most appropriate time to think on these things and to act on them.—"The Delineator."

Sleeping Sickness

The peculiar malady from which Mrs. J. P. Morgan has been suffering since June 14, popularly known as sleeping sickness, has taken a toll of 16 lives in Michigan during the first four months of the present year, with a total of 37 cases reported for the same period.

This disease, known as encephalitis lethargica in the medical profession, has been present in many parts of the world during the past few years. A severe epidemic appeared first in middle Europe, spreading rapidly to France and England, then crossing the Atlantic and continuing westward. Great Britain has been suffering from an epidemic during the past year, hundreds of cases being reported. New York state experienced an epidemic in 1923, when 360 cases and 112 deaths resulted within the space of three months. Michigan has been comparatively free from the disease, a total of 110 cases being reported within the two years 1923 and 1924, with 43 cases reported to date for the present year.

Sleeping sickness is a disease affecting the brain cells, causing the patient to fall into a deep sleep lasting for a long period, without any previous warning. It appears to be more prevalent during the late winter months, almost invariably following a severe epidemic of influenza, a characteristic of such outbreaks all over the world.

The disease affects all ages, the greatest proportion of cases however occurring between the ages of 25 and 50; likewise both sexes, although a greater number of cases occurred among males during the outbreak in New York, while it appeared more fatal to females.

Because of its comparative infrequency medical men have not been able to make an intensive study of the disease, and as no diagnosis can be made by laboratory findings, its causes are still undetermined and its treatment uncertain.

Army Worms Put In Annual Appearance

Army worms, destructive crop pests which visit the state nearly every year, have put in appearance two weeks earlier than usual this year. Reports received by Prof. R. H. Pettit, head of the entomology department at the M. S. C., indicate that the worms showed up in Calhoun county on June 22.

Usual method of stopping the Army Worms where they are discovered at work is by plowing furrows around the infested area to prevent spread of the pests. It is a race between the worms and the farmers, the former trying to spread over larger areas and the latter to prevent this.

Where the furrow method of control is not practical, as in lawns and gardens, a poison bait is recommended. Information on control work may be had from the Entomology Dept., M. S. C. E. Lansing, Michigan.

Old Dobbin To Show Us How He Can Pull

Old Dobbin, the faithful servant of Michigan farms, is at least to have a chance to show the world just how heavy a load he can pull. By means of the dynomometer, a new device to record pulling power of teams, a big contest for horse and mule teams will be staged at the M. S. C. on July 31, in connection with the annual Farmers Day at the college.

While the pulling contest will serve as one of the leading amusement features of the Farmers Day program, it will also contain no small amount of scientific interest for the horse lovers of the state. The particular type of farm horse best suited to heavy duty hauling should be shown pretty clearly in the elimination of the competition.

There are to be two classes in the test—teams weighing over 3,000 pounds and those tipping the scales under this total. An expensive set of harness goes to the winning team in each class, with one hundred dollars in cash split between the second and third place winners in each. Entries are open and free to any Michigan citizen owning a team of horses or mules that will pass inspection as to soundness. Farm teams are said to be especially desired. Stable room and feed will be furnished free by the college.

Eliminations will be held in the morning of Farmers Day, with the finals in each class before the speakers' stand at the big afternoon meeting.

See Chance To Take Clover Seed Harvest

While dry weather has been very unfavorable for clover hay production on the first crop in Michigan this year, a chance for many farmers to utilize the first crop for a seed harvest has been pointed out by Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the crops department at the M. S. C.

Inspection of fields has shown an unusually high percentage of seed developing in the first crop, and it is thought that it may pay in many cases to handle the first rather than the second crop for seed, where fields are clean and seed is apparently setting well. That native grown seed will probably be in great demand during the coming year is also predicted.

Crops and Soils Men To Meet In Michigan

Leading crops and soils specialists of the nation will visit Michigan on July 9 and 10, when the annual meeting of the American Society of Agronomy is held at the M. S. C. While most of the delegates are expected from the corn belt states, representation from all parts of the country is assured.

During the two day convention, the visiting farm experts will study various phases of Michigan agriculture, with especial attention to improvement work in scientific fields. The time will be divided evenly between the crops and the soil management ends of the program.

Great strides the state has taken in the past five years in increasing its acreage of alfalfa, and the methods whereby this has been brought about, will be one of the items of chief interest to the delegates. Michigan now ranks as the leading alfalfa state east of the Mississippi river. Members of the crops department at M. S. C. will discuss problems of seed adaptation and cultural practices which have been met in the state, not only with alfalfa but also with other crops.

Soil survey methods, soil management systems, special care for certain types of soil, and latest laboratory developments will be included in the soil discussions. Michigan's large acreage of muck lands will be featured.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Danger of an Anti-Foreign War in China Growing Greater Every Day.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

DEVELOPMENTS in China are moving swiftly toward a crisis and observers are predicting a repetition of the Boxer war of a quarter of a century ago. If such is the result of the present disturbances the world will have Moscow to thank for it. Communist agitators last week centered their efforts on Canton and the mobs made several attacks on Shameen, the foreign concession. Tuesday the demonstrators killed a Frenchman and wounded two British subjects there, and the British and French marines opened fire on the crowd, killing 30 and wounding 70 Chinamen. Next day the natives killed several more foreigners. An official dispatch from Hongkong says the firing on foreigners at Shameen was done by the student cadet corps of Kwantung university led by former Russian Red officers, who gave the order to fire. British Indian troops from Hongkong, and French and Japanese forces are gathering at Shameen and the fortifications are being strengthened.

The American association of China has cabled to Washington urging that the American government co-operate energetically with the other powers in suppressing the lawlessness directed against foreigners. It blames unsettled political conditions and soviet propaganda.

Anti-foreign demonstrations are by no means confined to the Canton region and there is daily expectations of serious nationwide demonstrations, with the laborers joining the students and others. Many foreigners are fleeing to Hongkong, and there was talk last week of concentrating all of them in the treaty ports. The feeling is especially against the British, but all foreigners are in danger. The Chinese government, still insisting on the 13 points advanced by its delegates at the recent futile conference in Shanghai, has sent a new note to the foreign diplomatic corps declaring that the time has come for a revision of the old treaties which give foreigners special privileges in China. It recalls that the existing treaties were concluded long ago under circumstances that did not permit free discussion; that conditions obtaining when these treaties were negotiated do not now exist. The radical press of Peking is insisting that the British charge d'affaires be handed his passport. The British are blamed for the shooting of workers and students during the rioting in Shanghai and Hankow.

Foreign Secretary Chamberlain told the house of commons in London that the British government possesses evidence that "agents of another government are fostering disturbances in China." That of course meant Russia, and indeed the Bolsheviks are quite open in their aid and sympathies. Karakhan, the soviet ambassador to Peking, announces that he is ready for the immediate opening of a Russo-Chinese conference. Whether Gen. Chang Tso-lin with the support of the Japanese can successfully combat the alliance between General Feng and the Russians remains to be seen. Just now Shanghai is in the control of Chang's troops commanded by the Manchurian general's son, who has declared martial law in native quarters.

THERE were positive indications last week that peace and amity will be restored in central Europe in the near future. Premier Painleve and Foreign Minister Briand explained to the council of ministers of France their plans to fulfill the promise given by Herriot to evacuate the Ruhr by August 5, one year after the Dawes plan went into effect, and the council gave its full approval. Withdrawal of the troops will begin at an early date. Diplomatic circles understood that France would no longer oppose the evacuation of the Cologne bridgehead. The French government now places full reliance on the Dawes plan for reparations and on the League of Nations, and apparently is confident that an agreement for the protection of the Rhine front will be effected with Germany.

Opening the debate in the commons on Great Britain's part in the proposed security pact, Foreign Minister Chamberlain asserted the government's policy was based solely on the desire "to make peace secure and war as remote a danger to humanity as ingenuity and good will could." He continued: "Our engagements must be directly limited to the western frontier. Nothing in the new treaty must affect the rights and obligations attaching to membership in the league. Our assistance cannot be invoked by a wrongdoer who objects to proposals to eliminate the cause of war." The proposed pact, he added, is a step toward disarmament because it would remove the fear of nations.

The opposition in the house only mildly criticised the government's announced policy. In the balcony the French and German ambassadors sat close together, and for the first time they shook hands cordially.

PRESIDENT VON HINDENBURG showed that he means to protect the German republic when he forbade Eitel Friederich, son of the former kaiser, to officiate at the knighting ceremonies of the Knights of St. John and ordered that the ceremonies be not held in the monarchist church in Potsdam as usual. Instead they were held in a small chapel at Sonnenburg. Von Hindenburg, who officiated last year, informed the order that he had "resigned his functions." The Knights of St. John have been most active workers for restoration of the monarchy.

IT WAS announced last week that France and Spain had signed an agreement for co-operation in blockading the Riffian coast and thus reducing Abd-el-Krim to submission, and reports were that the Riffians already were suffering from lack of supplies. Then came the story from an American correspondent in Madrid to the effect that the French and Spanish negotiations were deadlocked because the latter would not grant the French army leave to penetrate the Spanish zone as far as Sheshuan and then to proceed to Agadir if necessary to break up the Riff resistance. There was disagreement as to the Spanish plans of attack, also, and the correspondent says the French delegates warned the Spaniards that if an agreement was not reached France would denounce the Algeciras convention and demand a new international conference on control of North Africa. This would let Italy into the affair again, and the United States also would be interested.

After a fierce debate in the French chamber of deputies which culminated in a fist fight, Premier Painleve received a vote of confidence, 510 to 30, for his policy in Morocco. The right center and many Socialists supported the government. The premier insisted that Krim was surrounded by a group of German and Russian adventurers who are goading him to continue his fighting to become ruler of North Africa. He accused Moscow of aiding the Riffians, quoting the statement by M. Zinovieff, head of the third internationale: "When Spain is defeated Abd-el-Krim will create the gravest difficulties for France, which is most important for us, and we will utilize them."

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ANDREWS, with the approval of President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon, has announced that the federal prohibition enforcement system is to be entirely reorganized. State lines will be wiped out and the offices of state prohibition directors abolished. Twenty-two federal prohibition districts in the United States and one each in Porto Rico and Hawaii will be created, and each district will be in the charge of an administrator who will have two assistants and a chemist and a counsel. The prohibition commissioner in Washington will lose much of his authority, his duties being largely supervisory.

In adopting this new plan the department is carrying out the ideas of President Coolidge, who believes the proper function of the national government is to keep foreign liquor out of the country and to suppress the illegal making of liquor within the country. The catching and punishing of illicit drinkers is left to the states, and it is pointed out that in states like New York and Maryland, that now have no state enforcement acts, the local authorities are not absolved from enforcing the national statute.

GREECE is getting to be as addicted to revolutions as are the Central American countries. Last week another was staged there, in which the Saloniki garrison led and was joined by the fleet. According to the brief dispatches that filtered through, a military government was set up presided over by General Pangalos, former generalissimo who handled the rebels when the royalists were defeated in 1922 and proclaimed the Greek republic on December 30, 1923. All civil and military institutions have been occupied by the revolutionists and press censorship has been established. The immediate resignation of Premier Michalakopoulos was demanded because of his alleged inefficiency.

NEGOTIATIONS are now under way for the funding of Italy's war debt to the United States, the discussions having been begun in Washington between Ambassador de Martino and Mario Alberti on the one hand and Secretary Mellon and Undersecretary Winton of the American debt commission on the other. The Italian debt is about $2,138,000,000. The government at Rome wishes to spread its payments over a period of years and also desires that there be a delay in the beginning of actual remittances. The moratorium may be for ten years. The conferences concerning the debt are to be surrounded with secrecy, no statements being given out except formally by Mr. Mellon and the ambassador.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE with his family and suite is safely and comfortably installed in the summer White House at Swampscott, protected from intrusion by a guard of marines. Before leaving Washington he addressed the department and bureau chiefs urging further economies in the conduct of the government's business and making the welcome announcement that the economies already effected promised a reduction in income taxes of about $300,000,000. Total public expenditures in this fiscal year, ending June 30, are $3,035,000,000, compared with $5,116,000,000 in 1921, while the public debt has been reduced from $23,977,000,000 to $20,551,000,000. That retrenchment the President pronounced unparalleled in history. He estimated the surplus for this fiscal year at $200,000,000 and for the next fiscal year at $290,000,000, and said he would recommend to congress a reduction of taxes.

THE sensation of the week in the business world was the change of presidents and policies by the directors of the Chicago & Northwestern railway. President W. H. Finley resigned, ostensibly on account of ill health, and F. W. Sargent, vice president and general counsel, was elected to succeed him. At the same time Marvin Hughitt, the veteran railroader, resigned as chairman of the board of directors and that office was abolished.

The change in management of the Northwestern was generally accepted as having been brought about by banking interests that for several years have been dissatisfied with declining earnings and operating policies. The Vanderbilt and First National bank groups in New York are the dominant interests behind the road. Sweeping changes in operating policy are expected under Mr. Sargent. Under his direction, the Northwestern recently assumed the leadership in the move of the Western roads to obtain relief from poor earnings through an increase in freight rates. These applications are now pending before the interstate commerce commission.

ANOTHER United States senator, like La Follette a prominent member of the insurgent bloc, died last week—Edwin F. Ladd of North Dakota. He passed away in a Baltimore hotel after a long illness. Mr. Ladd, who was elected as a Republican with the support of the Nonpartisan league, was a staunch supporter of La Follette in the third party movement last year. His successor will be appointed by Governor Sorlie.

Figures Show Gain for Farm Products

Washington.—A survey of financial returns on 15,103 farms, made public by the Department of Agriculture, disclosed an average favorable margin last year of $1,024, between cash receipts and cash expenses, which, with increased inventories amounting to $181, brought the average return to $1,205 for the use of $17,260 of capital and the labor of the farmer and his family. These farms also produce an estimated average of $266 in food and fuel consumed on them.

The figures showed improvement over 1923, when a similar survey covering 16,183 owner-operated farms disclosed an average cash balance of $890, increased inventory of $130, and produced food and fuel worth $265, on capital amounting to $17,490.

The value of land and buildings on the farms surveyed in 1924, averaging 303 acres, was placed at $14,323, the size and value being about the 1920 census average.

Prices paid the farmer for corn and oats during the 20 months from August, 1923, to last March "fluctuated without relation to transportation costs, according to the bureau of railway economics.

Whereas farm prices of corn and oats were shown by the figures of the survey to have fluctuated widely during that period, freight rates were practically stationary, the bureau said, and therefore were "not responsible" for such fluctuation, whether upward or downward.

Marshall—The Marshall Farmers' Elevator Co. in the past year had the most successful year since its organization in 1917. A dividend of 10 per cent was paid to 198 stockholders at the annual meeting as against an eight per cent dividend a year ago.

Holland—Fire of undetermined origin in the power house of the summer home of J. C. Dinkman, at Waukazoo, near here, for a time threatened to destroy that summer resort. The entire Holland fire department was sent to the scene and prevented further spread of the flames.

Ann Arbor — Michigan will be represented to a slip of a girl from Old Japan at Oxford next fall, the first woman of a foreign land to take the credits of the local school to England's noted home of learning. The girl is Fumi Kinai, of Kyoto, a graduate of the University of Michigan this year.

Flint—Those Genesee county supervisors who want the new courthouse to stay within a $750,000 appropriation even if inferior materials must be used have clashed with those who want the size of the building reduced and the best material used, "so that the building will be a credit to the county."

Monroe—At a meeting of the board of education it was decided to hold an annual school election on July 13 for the purpose of selecting two members of the board. C. T. Southworth, president and John Eber are the outgoing members. The former has served 25 years on the board, a number of years as president and secretary.

Pontiac—The city of Pontiac has adopted an agreement with the Detroit United Railway giving a day-to-day right to operate lines within the city, on which franchises have expired. This includes about half the trackage in the city, on both local and interurban lines. The agreement calls for a 5-cent fare and universal transfers.

Alpena—The first motor driven passenger railway car to be seen in Alpena arrived at the B. C. G. and A. railway terminal station recently, with executives and guests aboard. The road has just completed plans for the purchase of the car which will be used on their railway west of Alpena to Boyne City. The new car will be placed in operation immediately.

Ypsilanti—Robert L. Barbour, of Highland Park, was elected president of the State Normal College Alumni Association at the annual meeting here attended by about 150 former students of the college. The association indorsed the present movement to raise $150,000 for the erection of the first unit of a $300,000 alumni memorial building on the local campus.

Grand Haven—Low water in the Grand river from the mouth of the harbor to the docks here, is making navigation of lake freighters difficult this summer, according to harbor officials. Fishermen report many shoal spots along the edge of the channel. The condition is blamed to lack of precipitation last spring. Many small tributaries to the Grand river are practically dry this year.

Monroe—Sheriff Joseph Kinsey and Coroner Fred C. Nadeau, while at Ida, discovered additional charred bones at the spot where a straw stack was set afire by two young men. The coroner believes the bones are those of a dismembered human body which were carried to the top of the stack in a gunney sack saturated with kerosene and then set fire. Two young fellows were seen running from the stack.

Mt. Clemens—Maj.-Gen. Henry C. Hale, commander of the Sixth Corps Area, has presented to the First Pursuit Group at Selfridge Field the only standards ever awarded an aerial unit of the Army. The event was the observance of the group's eighth anniversary. The presentation was made following review of the field personnel of 450 men and was followed by the air review in which 20 officers participated. As commander of the group, Maj. Thomas G. Lanphier received the standards.

East Lansing—When 293 graduates of Michigan State college received their diplomas here the event was historic because the class was the largest that has ever graduated from the school and because it was the first time that the diplomas have borne the new name of the college. Former Governor Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, delivered the commencement address, taking as his subject "The Need of Agricultural Education." He was introduced by President Kenyon L. Butterfield of the college.

Detroit—Two aviators, one a World war ace and the other a student friend, fell 200 feet to instant death when the airplane in which they were taking a pleasure spin caught fire, went into a nose dive and finally crashed to the earth. The dead are Frank Goddell, pilot of the fated machine, who has been a commercial aviation instructor at Detroit and nearby fields for the last eight years, and Charles Boffey, a novice at the air game, said to be a close friend of Goddell, who was to receive a plane of his own within a few weeks.

Ann Arbor—Offering several new courses and opening the new summer school of business administration, the University of Michigan has begun its thirty-second annual summer session. Eight schools and colleges will offer courses during the summer, according to Edward H. Krause, dean of the summer session, as well as work at the engineering camp and biological station at Douglas lake, and field work in geology and engineering in southern Kentucky. Registration to date indicates that there will be an increase in enrollment over last year.

Large Sum for Old New York Newspaper

The George D. Smith Book company got a Poe rarity for $830, in a copy of the New York Mirror of February 8, 1845, which printed "The Raven" by permission and in advance of the American Review, the magazine that had bought the verses from the author. This item occurred in a sale of the libraries of Carletta Russell Lowell and others, in the galleries of the American Art association. The Rosenbach company bought two Poe letters for $400. Another rare item, which E. H. Wells got for $900, was James Russell Lowell's ode in commemoration of living and dead soldiers of Harvard, recited by him at Harvard July 21, 1865, of which only 50 copies were printed, for presentation to friends. The inscription in the copy sold shows the author gave it to Mrs. Effie Shaw in September, 1865.—New York World.

Made Parsley Pattern

The history of the famous British Peel family is most interesting and romantic. Just 160 years ago one of the sons of a weaver who owned a small manor near Blackburn spoilt, in weaving, a piece of cloth made of linen and thread, and the father took it to the Claytons and asked them to have it printed with a pattern for kerchiefs. The price charged was so high that Peel determined to experiment himself. His first successful experiment was with a "Parsley Leaf" pattern and, when he saw the effect "Parsley Peel," father of the first Sir Robert, declared that he was a made man. So he was, for his son became very nearly the richest man in England.

Horse Carries Tail Light

Camden, N. J., has a police horse that carries a tail light. The horse is used by a mounted patrolman, and has been bruised several times by being struck by machines whose drivers did not see the animal. Determined to protect himself and his mount, the patrolman attached a red reflector to the tail of his horse. The reflector flashes red when the lights from a motor strike it, and the driver instinctively steers clear of the danger signal.

Auto Horns Banned

Automobiles in Jerusalem are being made to replace their horns with bells, due to the dislike of the authorities for harsh-sounding horns. The change has been ordered by general government decree and a limited time is allowed auto owners to install the new warning devices.

TWICE IN THIS WOMAN'S LIFE

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her from Sickness to Health

Ellensburg, Washington.—"When I was first coming into womanhood I suffered terribly every month. My mother did everything she could think of, so she took me to several doctors and they only helped me a little. Mother was talking to another lady about my condition and she told mother of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Mother got me six bottles and at the end of the first month I was much better, so I kept on taking it until I had no more pains. When I got married and had my first child I was in terrible pain so that it was impossible for me to do my housework. I thought of how the Vegetable Compound had been of so much benefit to me when I was a girl, so I went to Perier's Drug-Store and got six bottles. It sure did help me and I still take it. I am a well woman today and I can't say too much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I will answer any letter that comes to me to answer about what your medicine has done for me."—Mrs. WILLIAM CARVER, R. F. D. No. 2, Ellensburg, Washington.

TOO FAR OUT

Twas back in nineteen hundred ten
Detroit, we know, was smaller then
And Real Estate men told you why
DetroitRealEstate was good to buy.
They told you how Detroit would grow,
They showed you how to make some dough
But you, old man, seemed filled with doubt
You only said, "It's Too Far Out."

In nineteen-twenty we had grown,
And increased value too was shown.
The "stuff" you claimed was too far out
Had buildings on, and all about
Were churches, schools and theaters too.
Someone made money, was it you?
Or were you one of those who'd shout,
"Can't interest me, its too far out."

Detroit will grow as ne'er before,
And values here will upward soar,
And ground you think far out to-day
Tomorrow big returns will pay.
If you don't buy, urged on by us,
Three years from now you will cuss,
When you see others drawing rent,
While you're just getting three per cent.

So should our salesmen come to you
To tell you what Detroit will do,
Theyr'e giving you a well-known fact
That by statistics can be backed.
So listen, learn and profit, too,
By what our salesmen say to you;
They know the business they're about,
So don't tell them it's "too far out."

Several pigs ran back into the fire after being driven away and were killed. Mr. Miller had no insurance.

The New York Central Lines carried ten per cent of the passengers during 1924 and they claim that for the year not a single passenger has been killed. This is pretty chesty talk for even a big railroad to put over but we presume they can prove it. This applies to accidents only.

The United States Government has established a regular mail service between New York City and Chicago. A plane at each of these points hops off at daylight each day and lands at destination eight hours later passing each other midway. The distance is 770 miles approximately and there are 32 stopping places enroute where the planes can land if anything goes wrong. Ordinarily they never stop until the route is covered. They are carrying about one ton of mail at ten cents per ounce. The airway is illuminated by a series of iron towers or lighthouses at intervals equipped with gigantic search lights which throw piercing beams of light up and down and around sweeping the heavens and spotting the planes as they appear in the distance.

New York Central improves freight service

New York Central Lines in the last ten years have increased their investment in equipment (locomotives and cars) by $312,000,000.

And many millions more have been spent for larger and better facilities for the handling of traffic.

So great has been the resulting improvement in freight service since the period of Government operation that our shippers and receivers of freight find they need to carry smaller inventories of raw materials and merchandise. They are insured against traffic delays.

With less capital tied up in goods in transit and in storage, costs of production and distribution have been correspondingly reduced.

Dependable freight service is an asset to every community on our lines.

Many of our older readers will remember Irving Latimer, the young Jackson druggist who was convicted of the murder of his own mother in 1888 and incarcerated in the State Penitentiary for life. Three years later he made his escape after poisoning a guard but failed to get out of hearing of Jackson before he was captured and returned to the prison. For 32 years little has been known of him, but it is claimed Latimer has been a model prisoner without one single demerit and friends on the outside are seeking to excite propaganda in his behalf which would lead the pardon board to think Latimer should be pardoned

THE WALLACE SHOWS

Those who saw the big aggregation of animals and performers; roustabouts and colored stake drivers who follow the Wallace Shows, on the 4th, will rest assured that nothing in the line that is larger, will ever come to Hillsdale. The Wallace Shows surely represent the fruits of years of training on the part of managers acrobats and animals, For instance the mammoth herd of tigers which performed inside the stout steel cage set up in the ring, were a splendid example of organization. While it is freely granted that training Bengal Tigers is a risky performance yet if one were to observe the abandon with which both male and female trainers handled these fierce beasts, we should say it is boy's play. On one or two occasions we fancied the trained lions resented their tasks and it looked as if nothing but the most abject fear could compel them to do the stunts required. We are not familiar with the method of teaching these animals, and so could not say what the real danger is, but nothing but severest torture, we are sure, could produee the best results.

The clown contingent were undoubtedly as good or better than the average, but other than to amuse children, we think they are a necessary evil. The clown system has come down through the ages as a relic of chivalry. The courts of ancient Kings were never quite complete without the "jester" or court fool whose duty it was to make two smiles grow where only a frown grew before.

Taken as a whole the Wallace Shows were as much appreciated probably as the Hagenbeck circus last season, but side show features were not up to the Hagenbeck standard.

We are in recept of circulars which we mistrust are sent out by the Democratic party leaders as the contents pertain to establishing a temperance plank in their platform. These leaders have changed their coats several times in a decade but are still the same fire-eating Colonels they were at heart 40 years ago. They are trying to persuade people now that the Volstead law should be modified, claiming it is an institution of the devil bred by fanaticism; that the vaporings of these fanatics puts the kibosh on all kinds of temperance work and that the right of any man to make and use his wines, etc., in his own home should never be questioned, all of which no doubt has been ladled out to them by the "wets" Nobody in the dry ranks is going to be caught by any such delusion. We all know the "wets" are making superhuman efforts to convince the drys that the Volstead law cannot be enforced, but the results are not satisfactory to them.

Why Sheetrock is a different wallboard

What it is: Sheetrock is gypsum plaster cast in thick, rigid sheets. It is fireproof, non-warping and permanent. It can be sawed and nailed like lumber. Takes any decoration—wall paper, paint, or Textone in the new stipple finishes.

What it does: Sheetrock makes solid, highly insulating walls and ceilings that keep rooms warm in winter and cool in summer. That means more comfort and lower fuel bills. Then, too, Sheetrock walls and ceilings make buildings dust-tight, soundproof and vermin-proof.

Where it is usea: Sheetrock is the economical wall and ceiling material for many types of new construction and for all remodeling and repairs. It is just the thing for attic rooms, furnace rooms, fruit cellars, garages, offices and stores.

Where to get it: Get your Sheetrock from us. We carry it in standard ceiling heights and widths. Our trucks make prompt deliveries.

HELPED THROUGH CHANGE OF LIFE

Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound during This Critical Time—Benefited Greatly

Baltimore, Maryland.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to help me through the Change of Life and for a broken-down system. I had been complaining a long time and dragging along had tried other medicines which did not help me much. I read in the newspapers of the Vegetable Compound and after taking a bottle I felt better. I did not stop with one bottle, but took it through the whole critical time and am now practically a well woman. I have two daughters whose health was very bad before they married and I was worried about them. I got the Vegetable Compound for them and it helped them, and after they married it also helped them in bearing their babies. This is a great and good medicine for all complaints of women, and I recommend it to all."—Mrs. L. GINGRICH, 1375 N. Gilmor St., Baltimore, Maryland.

The Vegetable Compound is a dependable medicine for women of middle age. Let it relieve you of nervousness, that feeling of strain and those annoying hot flashes so common at this time.

Flyers Set Record

Aviators in the Royal Canadian Air force set a new record for safe flying last year by making up 3,340 hours of actual flying time without a fatal accident in carrying air mail, patroling forests and fisheries, and performing other government service, said a report from the Department of the Interior. More than 3,000 acres of forest in Alberta were covered twice a day by air patrols during the season of fire hazard, and in Manitoba 40,000 acres were under observation. The forces photographed 40,000 square miles of terrain for the topographical survey.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Earthquake on Pacific Coast Wrecks Business Section of Santa Barbara.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

NOT since the great San Francisco earthquake and fire has there been a disaster on the Pacific coast comparable to that which overwhelmed the pretty city of Santa Barbara on Monday. Two severe shocks early in the morning sufficed to lay in ruins most of the business section, and these were followed by a number of other temblors that added to the destruction. Owing to the hour at which the worst shocks occurred, coupled with the fact that the residence sections practically escaped damage, the loss of life was surprisingly small. Eleven persons died, most of them under the falling walls of hotels, and scores were injured. The water and gas mains were broken and the Sheffield reservoir, the main source of the city's water supply, collapsed, but the walls of the Gibraltar dam up in the hills held and a water famine was prevented by connections made with an old series of mains. The property loss was estimated at between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000. Some of the buildings wrecked, known to many thousands of Americans who have visited the California coast, were the Arlington and Californian hotels, the public library, county courthouse and jail, hall of records, American Legion, Knights of Columbus and Elks buildings, Central bank, County National bank, Morning Press building and the Santa Barbara mission. An expert survey shows that nearly all the structures destroyed were built on filled-in land.

While the earth was yet trembling the people of Santa Barbara began to lay plans for the city's reconstruction and within three days gangs of builders were following close on the heels of the wrecking crews. Bankers arranged for a revolving fund of $2,500,000 immediately and began negotiations to borrow $20,000,000 from financial institutions throughout the United States.

This coast quake was preceded by several temblors in the mountain regions of Montana, Wyoming, Idaho and Washington. Great landslides occurred, forming new lakes and in a number of instances interrupting railroad communication. Several through trains laden with tourists were stalled, but there was no loss of life. Further avalanches are looked for, especially in the Teton National forest, where one side of Chief mountain is reported to be cracking.

Dr. Paul Goode of the department of geography in the University of Chicago holds that these earthquakes are explained by a subsidence of the bed of the Pacific ocean and the settling of the cordillera forming the axis of the continent. Other scientists who are experts in seismology have other explanations. But all agree that more quakes along the Pacific coast may be expected. This, however, does not dismay the Californians any more than such predictions ever dismay the people who live in earthquake regions.

FRANCE for the first time has formally acknowledged her debt to the United States and the cabinet has voted to send a mission to Washington as soon as possible to arrange for funding the debt. This is in accordance with the advice of Foreign Minister Briand and Finance Minister Caillaux. Nothing definite is known as to what the French will propose, but it is assumed they will ask a moratorium and credits in America. It is expected the French mission will accompany the Belgian delegation headed by former Premier Theunis.

There may be some delay in the French cabinet's program due to the Socialist opposition to Caillaux's plans for financial renovation, especially his taxation plan for providing a sinking fund for debt payments. Negotiations for funding Italy's debt are held up for a month or so while Mario Alberti, technical expert, goes to Rome for additional data on his country's capacity to pay, and to discuss the debt situation fully with Premier Mussolini.

WEDNESDAY night, on the first anniversary of the inauguration of through transcontinental air mail service, the overnight air mail service between New York and Chicago was started. From each end of the route a squadron of planes hopped off at the same time, Vice President Dawes giving the word to go by radio. Assistant Postmaster General Paul Henderson was at the Chicago end, and Postmaster General New swung the first sack of mail onto a plane at Hadley field, New Brunswick, N. J., the eastern end. The rate for the service is 10 cents an ounce, and the normal time between the two cities is eight hours and fifteen minutes. The route is lighted for the pilots by 150 immense electric beacons, and thirty-two landing fields have been provided for emergency, designated by intermittent flashes of searchlights. Other flashes tell the pilots the weather conditions. Each pilot carries flare lights of a new type which, attached to parachutes, make forced landings comparatively safe.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE was called hurriedly from the summer White House at Swampscott to Plymouth, Vt., because of the serious condition of his father. But the aged colonel submitted to a surgical operation and the progress of his recovery was so rapid that the physicians told the President he could return to White Court. So in a few days he and Mrs. Coolidge started back by motor, losing their way several times but ultimately arriving safely.

MRS. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS has been elected by the voters of the Fifth congressional district of Massachusetts to fill the vacancy in the house caused by the death of her husband, John Jacob Rogers. She is a Republican and defeated her Democratic opponent, former Gov. Eugene N. Foss, by more than two and a half to one. Mrs. Rogers will be the first New England woman to sit in congress.

CHANG TSO-LIN, the Manchurian war lord, has forced the Chinese government to deal first with the strike incidents at Shanghai and thus at least defer a break with the powers. A joint commission is now considering that phase of the troubles. This doesn't suit Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang, who has issued a proclamation calling for a war to abolish the extraterritorial rights and other alleged injustices. Meanwhile the British have landed a considerable force on Shameen island, the foreign quarter of Canton, in the face of a demand from the government that the island be evacuated with an apology, that the British and French withdraw their warships from Kwangtung waters and make compensation for losses of Chinese lives and property.

If there were needed any further proof of the part the Russian soviets are taking in the Chinese disturbances, it was provided by the arrest at Shanghai of Zinovis Dosser and his wife. Many incriminating documents were found on them, one specifically certifying that Dosser was sent by the "agitation department" of the Communist party to Hongkong and Canton to organize strike committees.

John MacMurray, the new American minister to China, has arrived in Peking. At Tokyo he said only a most serious emergency should induce America to make armed intervention and that this does not exist at present.

ABD-EL-KRIM made a supreme effort to break the French lines between Cheyab and the Algerian frontier, hoping thus to open his way to Fez. But the French met him with every arm and repulsed the tribesmen with severe losses all along a 60-mile front. In this they were aided by many loyal Moroccans. Abd-el-Krim led his troops in person.

AMERICA'S great Pacific fleet, comprising 50 vessels, sailed from Honolulu on Wednesday for Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania. When nearing Australia the fleet will be split into two detachments, and later the ships will scatter a good deal so as to visit all ports in that part of the world. All are expected to be back at Honolulu on September 10.

The day the fleet sailed 110 representatives of eight countries bordering on the Pacific met in Honolulu in a Pan-Pacific conference which they hope will be epochal in the making of peace. Governor Farrington welcomed the delegates and the residents are doing themselves proud in the way of entertainments. Among those attending the conference are many eminent scientists, educators, economists, statesmen and business men.

JOHN L. LEWIS, head of the coal miners, addressing a tri-state meeting at Scranton, Pa., promised to make a fight to the finish in the approaching negotiations with the anthracite operators to renew the contract expiring August 31, and then warned the bituminous operators that a nation-wide strike in the soft-coal fields might be ordered unless steps were taken to enforce the Jacksonville agreement. He charged there was an "infamous conspiracy" between certain soft-coal operators and certain railroads to scuttle the three-year agreement, and scored J. D. Rockefeller, Jr.; Charles M. Schawb and Secretary of the Treasury Mellon for not using their influence as large stockholders in bituminous companies to prevent violation of the agreement.

WHEN the general reorganization of the government's prohibition enforcement system goes into full effect on August 1, it is believed Commissioner Roy A. Haynes will resign and run for governor of Ohio as a Republican. It is known that he has sought several times to quit his present post but was persuaded to stay on. Last fall he wanted to go after the governorship as Prohibition candidate, but President Coolidge changed his mind.

ROY P. WILCOX of Eau Claire, Wis., president of the Wisconsin Bar association, is the first to announce his candidacy for the senate seat made vacant by the death of Mr. LaFollette. His announcement says: "I shall not be a candidate of any group or faction, but shall welcome the support of all those who have in the past supported the things I have stood for, and of all who may wish to support them now. A new deal in Wisconsin politics is demanded, which shall be in hearty accord with President Coolidge in his program for reduced taxation and efficient constitutional government. We are fortunate to have such a leader."

Francis E. McGovern of Milwaukee, former governor, also announced that he was a candidate for the senate seat.

Others who have been mentioned for the place but who have not declared their intentions include Mrs. LaFollette, Secretary of State Fred Zimmerman and Zona Gale, the well-known author.

ALL but two of the ice-box manufacturers who, together with a lot of other furniture makers, were indicted in Chicago for violation of the anti-trust law by stabilizing and artifically raising prices, pleaded guilty and were fined a total of $68,000 by Federal Judge Cliffe. The next bunch to be arraigned comprises the makers of dining room, bedroom and living room furniture.

DR. JACOB GOULD SCHURMAN, the new American ambassador to Germany, presented his credentials to President von Hindenburg and made a neat little speech.

"It is the desire of my government," Doctor Schurman said, "to cultivate to the fullest extent mutual friendship between our two countries. Animated by cordial sentiments originating in my youthful studies in Germany, I will find special satisfaction in carrying out the instructions of my government."

ONE hundred American physicians are attending the first international congress of radiology, which opened in London, but industries like coal and structural steel are also deeply interested, for the radiologists are developing methods of analysis and tests of strength by the X-ray. Something of this was told in the opening paper, which was read by Dr. Norman Kemp, an American scientist.

"Beauty" Cure for Mental Disorders

Kankakee, Ill.—Beauty parlors to improve the appearance of women patients at state hospitals for mental disorders are succeeding remarkably well as therapeutic measures, according to Dr. W. A. Stoker, managing officer of the state hospital here.

Working on the theory that normal women react quickly to any improvement in their appearance, Dr. Stoker has attempted to stimulate his patients in the same manner. Special attention is given to their appearance in a beauty parlor equipped for all kinds of beauty treatment.

"A woman's appearance reflects her habits of mind, a legitimate desire to attract admiring attention, or at least avoid unpleasant comment," Dr. Stoker declared. "Mental disturbance is too often shown by carelessness in dress and appearance.

"The women patients become accustomed to this unpleasing appearance and unless something is done to bring to them the necessity as well as the advantage of looking attractive their loss of looks even exceeds their mental deterioration."

The results so far, Dr. Stoker said, have been encouraging and other hospitals are following the example of Kankakee, notably Elgin.

"The realization of some degree of selfrespect along these lines is bound to be reflected in an improvement of the mental condition of our female patients and thus will constitute a real therapeutic measure," Dr. Stoker said.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Jackson—John Szekeres, Michigan State Prison inmate, has escaped from the state road camp at Cambridge Junction.

Cadillac—The Michigan Potato Growers' Exchange will hold its seventh annual meeting at Cadillac Aug. 19 and 20. Directors to succeed O. S. Wood, of Barryton, and S. E. Rogers of East Jordan, will be elected.

Port Huron—Plans are under way to organize a statewide association of women's Republican clubs as the result of a conference held here at which Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, of Louisville, Ky., vice-chairman of the national Republican committee, presided.

Lansing—A move by which the inter state commerce commission may put its finger of control to some extent on Michigan's highway traffic was seen in the inauguration of a motor truck freight service by the Michigan Central railroad between Kalamazoo and Niles.

Detroit—Greater Detroit has passed the 1,400,000 population mark. This is the estimate of the attendance department of the board of education. It is based upon incompleted results of the joint school and general city census which was taken by board of education enumerators.

Cadillac — The Cummer-Diggins Lumber Co. has offered the city of Cadillac a large acreage of cut-over land in Colfax township, Wexford county, for reforestation under direction of the Izaak Walton league. One other similar tract recently was offered the city by another donor.

Lansing—The State of Michigan will derive $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 additional taxes from charitable institutions under the Evans benevolent society taxation act adopted by the 1925 legislature. The new law becomes effective August 28. Reports on which the tax levy can be based will be required of all benevolent organizations.

Saginaw—Initiatory petitions asking a vote of the people on the question of an increase in street car fares here have been filed with the city council. The petitions are carrying more than 2,000 signatures in excess of the charter requirements. They ask that the ticket fare for the Saginaw Transit Co. be increased from 6 1-4 to 8 1-3 cents.

Grand Rapids—William B. Leeds, son of the former tinplate king and of Princess Anastasia, of Greece, recently spent a day here as the guest of Dr. Ferris N. Smith. Leeds, who is reputed to be worth $75,000,000, found more interest in donning surgeon's garb and watching an operation at a local hospital than in being lionized by society.

Lansing—Sleeping sickness, known to the medical profession as lethgaric encephalitis, has been the cause of 16 deaths in Michigan within the first four months of the present year, with 37 cases reported. Compared with the figures of 1923 and 1924, when the number of cases reported was 65 and 45 respectively, the present incidence appears rather high.

Port Huron—The flat water rates of the city will be increased about 22 per cent July 1, and metered water rates will be increased about 40 per cent. It is proposed to increase the revenue from the waterworks department from $115,000 to $165,000 to meet the interest due on a water bond issue of $338,000 made in 1917 for improvements and extensions.

Battle Creek—Continued search for William E. Porter, wealthy glass manufacturer who disappeared from the Battle Creek sanitarium has failed to prove whether he is dead or alive. During the four days of hunting in rivers, lakes and with the use of three bloodhounds, no trace has been found of the missing man, who was under treatment for a nervous collapse.

Port Huron—J. S. Gray, managing editor of the Adrian Telegram, was re-elected president of the Michigan Associated Press Editorial association in annual convention here. Besides re-electing all other officers, the association named Arthur R. Treanor, of the Saginaw, Mich. News-Courier, to represent Michigan on the advisory board of the central division of the Associated Press.

Lansing—Further investigations into the conduct of Sanilac county officials are to be conducted by the state, it was announced following the removal of John Hyslop, Sandusky justice of the peace. It was understood that the sheriff and prosecuting attorney may be the subjects of the inquiry. In a hearing held prior to the removal of Hyslop some testimony was offered that the sheriff and the justice of the peace "split" fees illegally.

Menominee—Karl Knaus, Menominee County agricultural agent, has been appointed superintendent of the Menominee County Agricultural school, recently taken over by the state under tentative plans to develop it into an Upper Peninsula College, a branch of Michigan State College. Mr. Knaus succeeds R. N. Kebler, resigned. J. L. Bumbalek, a graduate of the University of Wisconsin Agricultural college and later agricultural instructor at the Ashland, Wis., experimental station, has been engaged as principal.

Holly—Miss Eva Lake, night operator of the Michigan Bell Telephone company, risked her life to remain at her post and sound the alarm of a fire which nearly wrecked the interior of the Wilson building where the telephone office is located, doing damage estimated at between $15,000 and $20,000. An electric push button in a rear room in the telephone office starts an electric siren giving the village night fire alarms. She found the room where this signal button was located, filled with flames, but managed to reach the signal.

The Usual Answer

Dr. A. G. Sinclair, pastor of the famous Old First church of Bloomfield, N. Y., is receiving congratulations on the success of the Mothers' day exercises in his Bible school. He described touchingly to the children a painting. A cottage interior, a child dangerously ill, the father and the doctor hovering near, the mother seated at a table, her head in her arms.

"What do you think the mother was doing?" asked the minister.

Like American Bungalows

American films have popularized the American bungalow, with its built-in furniture and many modern living conveniences, to the people of Brazil. Forty-five per cent of the new dwellings going up in Sao Paulo, Brazil, at the present time, are copied from the California product. The only difficulty encountered is the general absence of a servant's room; all middle-class Brazilians have servants, due to the cheapness of labor.

Atlanta Church Is Hypocritical

We can conceive the following might take place in the other churches but to be informed the Baptist Tabernacle would allow such performances seems unbelievable. From a little phamphlet published at Washington D. C. called "Liberty" which some kind soul has supplied us with for a long time back, we glean the following relative to Sabbath desecration in the church. The following item was clipped from the Millen (Georgia) News under date of March 19, 1925.

"Modern dances will be graphically illustrated and contrasted with the old square dances at the Baptist Tabernacle here Sunday afternoon.

Rev. H. L. Stevens, evangelist and Elmer Slider, superintendent of the Sunday school will dance together on the platform, giving first the old fashioned square dances and following with the modern fox trots and fancy steps.

Reverend Stephens weighs about 265 pounds, and Mr. Slider about 200. The platform has been specifically braced for the occasion.

The evangelist also has invited Atlanta card players to bring their deck of cards with them to the meeting. He will discuss the movie card playing, and dancing "in his shirt sleeves."

This item shows the trend of the times. While it is supposed the Christian church abhors public dancing these gentlemen are proposing to put on a real performance either to demonstrate the folly of dancing or to take out its teeth. But for whichever purpose intended the effort is a burlesque on decent religion and seems well nigh blasphemous. A few years ago when our village was in the throes of re-building our Methodist and Congregationalist churches, we heard somebody say something about a Community church—and that somebody also remarked that in his or her opinion the one big church in North Adams would be amply sufficient to accomodate the religious training the village needed. Somebody else remarked that the only way to bring about a reform among the younger class of church goers was to consolidate the three churches, put in a pool table or two, establish bowling alleys and a gymnasium in the basement and tell the boys and girls to go to it. We are not prudish and we claim to be liberal toward the budding expanding natures of the boys and girls but may God Almighty help anybody who would put up such an argument as that, expecting to make religious beings out of the coming generation! It can't be done. If that is the view that some people have of religious duty, it is to be hoped this particular class will never get control of our affairs.

We have had all kinds of pastors here from the strictly Puritan Orthodox long faced brown garbed martinet to the glib, stylish horse jockeying sporting modernist, and each one had some particular hobby which he put forth to turn our young people's thoughts into proper channels, and just as regularly failed to accomplish what he claimed to want, so it is not entirely the job of the pastor to manage our churches. The undeniable fact remained—our younger generation have gradually pulled away from the christian teachings of the fore fathers, they have manufactured a religion for their own needs which is not strictly a religion but more properly a burlesque on religion. While our young people are advancing faster than ever before in a literary and social way they are falling far behind in real piety. When it comes to the test, spiritualism takes it flight and sordid worldiness is left to take its place. So long as the world stands there will never be but one religion that is religious—the putting away of worldly things and the leaving alone the habits of life which tend to destruction of physical and spiritual being. It may be possible yet that some "higher criticism" gospel dispenser will succeed in concocting a religion for his class of people along the opposite lines and he may make them believe it is the real thing but results will be disasterous. Churches and common decency will evaporate under such teachings like snow under May sun. We hear quite frequently about "fighting Pastors" who have made a reputation for themselves by putting on the boxing mitts and knocking out a few laymen for exercise just before breakfast, but we never have heard of these vaudeville guys afterwards—don't know where they went, at any rate they seemed to have become spiritually dead or laid away somewhere for relics of the dark ages. We do not believe that the religion of the Holy Bible calls for any special demonstrations along the line of pugilism and we seriously doubt that "Modernism" has a single representative in Heaven.

Deaths Diminishing

The death toll of American firecrackers continues to decline. A dozen mid western cities which a decade ago reported death rolls resembling the casualty list from the battle of Bunker Hill, today counted less than a score of fatalities and less than 200 injured.

Chicago recorded four deaths from powder burns and untimely explosions, and a score of minor injuries. St. Louis had two deaths and approximately 100 injuries, 15 of which were considered serious Milwaukee Eastern Wisconsin. Northern Illinois and Southern Michigan reported ten fatalities in the unusually heavy holiday automobile traffic. One man was killed in an automobile accident at Kansas City and drownings occurred at Oshkosh, Wis., and Joplin Mo.

The Chicago fire department wrote a new line in its history today when it recorded but one alarm as a result of fireworks. Only 28 alarms were turned in, against a holiday normal of 41.

Five persons were killed in Detroit the 4th, and 20 injured in various accidents. Four of the five died as a result of automobile accidents while a number of the injuries were due to automobiles. One death resulted from drowning.

Twelve persons were killed in New York as the result of participation directly or directly in 4th of July celebrations and holiday amusements and 37 were injured. One 14 year old boy, who had been sent to play on the roof for safety, was killed when a stray bullet fired by an Independence Day celebrator, struck him in the stomach. Another 13 year old boy died from a self inflicted wound and a four year old girl died from fire cracker wounds.

Four persons were drowned while on holiday outings while three more were reported as missing after attempting to swim ashore when their canoe upset. One man was killed when he backed into an open elevator shaft as he was flying pigeons from a roof. Three persons were killed by automobiles while celebrating the holiday.

Nineteen persons were killed in Ohio July 4th in automobile mishaps, accidental shooting and cutting affrays. Thirteen were killed in automobile accidents; two in accidental discharge of guns; one by lightning and two in a shooting and one in a cutting affray.

The President's Outing

President Coolidge is at present enjoying an outing at his summer home at Swampscott, Massachusetts, and few if any of us really know what the chief executive of this nation is obliged to undergo for the naked glory of being commander-in-chief of the army and navy and president of the United States.

If anybody thinks the president is enjoying a real snap, they have another guess coming. Try as hard as he may, there is no possible chance for him to escape the awful responsibility of the office. Mails and official correspondence follow him to that secluded spot and in every sense of the word he is a "shut in" who is not allowed to walk out of his own dooryard without the permission of the marine guard who is constantly patrolling the grounds surrounding the house at Swampscott.

This seems like a pretty strong statement but it is true. If he receives a visit from his neighbors it must be under the guidance and in the hearing of a half dozen secret service men. It is claimed if the president should be so careless as to forget the countersign, he could not pass the marine guard who does not know him, and who positively will not permit any person to pass, either going or coming, without it. This, we suppose, is necessary—but most of us feel we would rather be some other person than president—if such restrictions must be put up with.

Each time either the President or Mrs. Coolidge ventures outside their home, they must be accompanied by not less than three strapping secret service men, some before, some hehind and at each side and neither the President or Mrs. Coolidge can speak to any person privately.

During the absence of the Coolidges from the White House at Washington, it has been cleaned, new carpets installed, new draperies pu up and new hangings and furniture put n, for the first time, we believe since the Roosevelt regime, If you knew what it cost to re-furnish a residence for our chief executive, you'd be thunderstruck and even at that the White House looks like a barn compared to the official residences of foreign nobility. For instance the palace of former Kaiser Wilhelm at Berlin and the Czar of Russia at Petrograd can be taken as fairly good examples. and their gold linings and furnishings would probably average more than a dozen White Houses in value. Since the murder of th Czar s family the Reds have used tne Royal Palace for most anything they needed.

President Coolidge is a typical yankee and as such he may be depended on to retain his good standing while on his vacation and return refreshed to his labors.

Buy Eggs Now For Winter Use, Local Housewives Urged

Eggs bought now and preserved for winter use means approximately a five dollar saving on this one item of food alone to every family in Hillsdale county, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. This statement is based on figures showing that the price of eggs is generally twice as high from November to February as it is in June.

The practice of putting away eggs for winter not only bespeaks economy but should also induce a greater consumption of this almost ideal food, states the Institute in explaining the preservation process. Two four gallon stone or earthenware crocks, capable of holding twenty dozen eggs, will be found sufficient for the average family. They should be first cleaned and scalded with boiling water. The eggs are then placed small end down and a cooled solution of water glass (sodium silicate), one quart to nine quarts of water that has been boiled and thoroughly cooled, is poured over the eggs to close up the pores in the shell to prevent the egg liquids from evaporating. The topmost layer of eggs should be kept covered with the solution to a depth of at least two inches at all times. The crocks are then placed in a cool dry place after being tightly covered with waxed paper to prevent the evaporation of the solution.

Eggs preserved in this fashion can be kept in perfect condition from six to ten months and used for every purpose, according to the Institute. They will appear more watery when broken out of the shell, but the flavor and nutritive qualities will be very satisfactory. When the eggs taken from the crocks are to be boiled, a small hole should be made in the shell with a pin at the large end of the egg before placing it in the water. This permits the air in the egg to escape and will prevent it from cracking.

HO! FOR THE LIFE OF A COWBOY

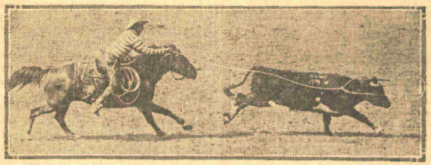
Ever eat beans ("Mexican strawberries") dished up from a chuck wagon? Ever sleep out with a saddle for a pillow? It's a great life—if you like it. say the cowboys.

Thousands of Americans, who want to see how real western cowhands live and play, are planning to attend the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo beginning August 15. Cowboys from every part of the West will be on hand for this great western spectacle, which will be held under the auspices of the Chicago Association of Commerce. For nine days Chicago's big Grant Park Stadium will look like a scene from the "Covered Wagon days" as the scores of expert bronk riders, lariat throwers and steer wrestlers show their stuff while competing for $30,000 prize money and world championship titles. Tex Austin, who has staged so many successful contests including the great international contest at Wembley, England, will direct the Chicago event.

MAGIC OF RODEO ROPERS



Wizards with iron wrists, who can send a lasso snapping through the air with the accuracy of a rifle bullet, will work their magic when famous ropers will meet at the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo to be held for nine days, beginning August 15. A good portion of the prizes put up by the Chicago Association of Commerce, under whose auspices the cowboy contests will be held, is set aside for the ropers. Champions, past and present, have written Tex Austin, that they will be on hand to compete for the awards and the world's championship title. Austin, who has put on many big rodeos, will direct the Chicago contests. A steer or calf in action makes remarkable speed and to send the loop of the lariat whipping through the air and to have it land unerringly around horns or neck is one of the most difficult of cowboy feats. To do this and then to throw and tie the animal must be the work of only a few seconds. The experts are bringing their own roping ponies, so intelligent and highly trained that some are almost priceless.

SECRETARY LIKES THE RODEO

In the West he's "Bill." But in official Washington he's William Marion Jardine, secretary of agriculture, a member of President Coolidge's official "family." Secretary Jardine has been invited to attend the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo, to be held for nine days, beginning August 15. Those who know him say that he will be on hand for this greatest of all cowboy contests, as Secretary Jardine has not lost the spirit of the West where, years ago, he rode the range and punched cattle with the best of them.

Back in Idaho they like to tell how the secretary of agriculture busted bronchos and threw a rope. They're proud of their "Bill" and they're willing to wager that he could ride into the arena at the Chicago Rodeo and make some of the expert cowhands hustle for honors. The competitions will be held under the direction of Tex Austin for the world's championship titles, belts and trophies and $30,000, the largest cash purses paid anywhere.

Investigating The Coal Situation

As a result of the efforts of the government to break up the coal combine and bear down the price the following facts have come out: The anthracite mining industry for the whole United States is controlled by practically eight mine corporations, and they have become so strongly combined, in business the government can find no possible opening for an attack. We often wish for another Roosevelt in the presidentia chair who might do something rash to ameliorate conditions.

As a consequence of the above, we are paying probably 25 per cent more for our hard coal than we should, and the authorities at the nation's capitol claim they have no jurisdiction (?) These mines are owned as personal properties, and for the United States to commandeer them outright would be a tyrany—the same as compelling the farmer to accept 25 per cent less for his produce simply because a lot of people in New York City were starving and could not afford to buy flour, potatoes and meat.

The soft coal situation is no better, since it has been proven we are paying $8.00 per ton for coal we should buy for from $5.00 to $7.00. Some one rises to inquire how this comes about. We'll explain; Every dealer who sells coal in Hillsdale county, if he amounts to anything, must agree to certain things, and if he don't agree, he can't have the coal. It is called Coal Dealers Association—you can dub it what you will. The results are as stated—simply a hold-up for the man who must have the coal to fight winter's frosts.

The dealer is in no case blamable for the situation, and he is between "hell and high water" as the mountaineer would say, but the whole situation is splendidly depicted in a cartoon recently published. It depicts a great giant of a fellow standing over a poor little shrimp of a chap who begs for his life. The big one has one mighty fist drawn back to knock the little fellow into Kingdom Come, while the latter with tears in his eyes' pleads "I ain't done nothin Mr., and I wont do it again." The giant was labelled "striker" and the little shrimp is the poor lambasted coal buyer. That's the way it works—every time the striker goes on a vacation, instead of hitting the rich operator, he has landed right on the solar plexus of the coal consumer.

Eternal disgust has led many otherwise respectable citizens to wish the Soviets could rule the American government long enough to take care of this wholesale robbery of the public. Such injustice makes anarchists of us all.

A Plea For The Youth

Abraham Lincoln said in a speech delivered at Springfield, Illinois., June 15, 1858, with reference to the great crisis then confronting the nation, "If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending, we could better judge what to do and how to do it."

The great problem before America today is the Youth. Some writers are asking, "Where is the trouble and who is to blame?" Policemen, mayors, juvenile court judges and prison wardens say negligence in the home. Yes, the home has lost its grip and our Youth has gone to dance hall, poolroom, gambling den and numerous other vice places. The poison cigarette has lured many a boy away. Who permits these vices? Who, but the fathers of our Youth, permits them?

Statistics show that 27,000,000 children are without any religious training in the home. Seventy five percent of the crimes committed are by youths under twenty five years of age. Let's put the fathers of the seventy five boys up for trial. Let's hear some of the child's ideas of what father is doing. Three little boys were arguing under what conditions they were born. You know a child's mind is a mystery; they often wonder as they begin to think very early in life, they wonder and think about what they hear older people say. Back to the boys now. One said, "Daddy was away from home when I was borned." Where was he? First Boy "I don't know." Second boy: "My daddy wasn't home either when I was borned. He was at the club." Third boy; "My daddy nor mammy were narry one home when I was borned." Where were they? "They were both at the club when I was borned."

Now, let's take the boys in the middle teens: One says, "We can't choose our fathers; we have to take them as we find them." Second boy said: "I never had a father. He was a shriner." Third boy said: "My father was a crank. He was always right and everyone else was wrong, especially the boy He never gave any reason why he was right." So clubs and numerous organizations are getting the fathers, and the streets' alleys, vice and crime, are getting our youth.

One father asked me, "Do you believe in heredity?" I certainly do. "Well, I know a boy who stole an automobile, but his father never stole one. Also a bootlegger, whose father never made booze." That is no argument whatever.

Fathers of these boys, did you ever take your boy and the Bible and find the ten commandments and teach that boy of yours, "Thou shalt not or thou shalt?" How many times do you go to church and Sunday school with him? How many times did you tell him he must go to Sunday school? You perhaps sat at home reading the paper, or had some work planned to do. Perhaps fix your car. How many of these fathers know where the ten commandments, the Lord's prayer or the eight Beatitudes are? Who Moses, Daniel, or Solomon were and what their mission was, and what place in the Bible and the time in Bible history did they live?

I have before me the statement of twelve men. They all made this statement. "It is the neglect of religion in the home." One said it "was the shirking and irresponsibility of parents, especially the father, due to irreligion in the home." We have so many fathers of the Old English or German type. They are drivers. I have a story from a boy: He said he "stayed on the farm with his father until he was twenty five; never had any privileges or anything to say." His father always said this or that must be done. No one else must say anything. He never trusted him to go to town to transact any business The father never talked over any business with him, the mother was about the same. They were both drivers. It was hustle to school, hustle home and hustle to work. The boy finally got away from home blundered and stumbled, but at last fortune came to him; by some struggling he got a position and made good. He was fortunate in getting a good helpmate. This is no newspaper story. It was told me by the boy himself. The boy is from Michigan.

Here's a girl's story. She said her father held her family as chattels. Even the mother was a chattel. "As soon as I got old enough I began to rebel. I got many a punishment, but took my punishment and kept on rebelling. At the age of seventeen I ran away from home. My father would not come after me and he would not let mother, but with some hard struggling and a desperate fight, I made good and never went home again to stay. I am thirty five years old now and I am free." These are not foreign stories. They are American. I wonder if the American father will ever look into the welfare of his boy and girl, as he does the care of his cattle, hogs, or crops; or the selling of a horse or cow.

Father, do you know what grade your boy is in at school? I have asked this question of several fathers. They said, "Well, no. I always left that for the wife. I am too busy getting the living." More than that, what kind of a standard do you put up for your boy or girl? Look through the ten commandments and see how many times you have broken them in the last three months. Also there is the cigarette and tobacco, with all their deadly poison. I remember very well my father making or taking the juices as they called it then. Now they call it nicotine. If his hogs or cattle got lousy, he put it on them to kill the lice. The gardener and florist use it to kill insects on the plants. So, fathers, if you want to commit suicide, just put the nicotine used in one cigar into liquid form and swallow it. You will soon forget all your troubles. No wonder a boy is a murderer or thief, with such an example.

In 1921 the tobacco bill was $3,000,000,000, allowing $3,000 to each home. Are we not doing our youth great injustice in spending only $1,000,000,000 a year in maintaining our public schools, while $3,000,000,000 are going for the ruining of the body, mind and soul When a nation spends three times as much to tear down its boys and girls, as it does te develop its citizens, is it not time to call a halt? Isn't it time that America should see and think straight. A visit to Lapeer would, or ought to, convince any American father that something is wrong.

"Frank" Is Notable

Frank J. Boyd editor of the River Rouge (Detroit) Herald and Oakwood Outlook has recently came into the limelight in the publishing world. In the issue of July 4, 1925 of the Publisher's Auxiliary appears a write up of Boyd and his partner Mr. Steve Mason as follows: At the head of the article is shown a photo of both Boyd and Mason:

"The old saw about two heads being better than one might be given the amendment, "especially if one is old and the other is young to fit the particular case of Mason and Boyd, publishers of the River Rouge Herald a live weekly published in this Detroit (Mich.) suburb. The Herald is a full seven column size, never less than 12 pages and frequently runs 16 to 20 pages. It carries an average of 1,500 inches of advertising a week.

Frank J. Boyd is the "old" head of the team. The principal factor in his success must be attributed to his character, for his friends can think of no finer tribute to pay him than to say that Frank J. Boyd's word need never be doubted—it is as good as a bond. Coupled with this fundamental asset he has behind him 27 years of experience in publishing country newspapers and this training was the reason for making the Herald first of all a newspaper.

Mr. Boyd published the North Adams (Mich.) Advocate for 15 years. After selling out there he went to California for two years. On his return to Michigan he bought the Dundee Reporter, which he published for about a year and later published the Grass Lake News for perhaps six months. Eight years ago he went to River Rouge and bought the Herald which was then on the point of suspension.

Stephen F. Mason, the other half of the winning team, four years ago became associated with Mr. Boyd and because of his ability was taken in as a partner two years later. He is an energetic youth in his early twenties who has readily absorbed the ideals imparted to him by his senior partner

Under the four year regime of Mason and Boyd 95 percent of the business men of River Rouge have been converted into consistent, enthusiastic advertisers; three competing newspapers, manned by metropolitan newspaper workers. have been buried in the journalistic graveyard and the Herald has been elevated from a place of mediocrity to power, prominence and prosperity."

The Pere Marquette railroad last week announced that hereafter trains running between Grand Ledge and Lansing would be freight and passenger mixed. the new schedule calling for one train a day each way and with no attempt at prompt connection with main line trains at Grand Ledge. Until this action the Big Rapids-Ionia division was considered one of the important links in the great Michigan system of the Pere Marquette and plainly shows how complete is the surrender made to bus transportation. At the present time there may be a tendency to let this be the problem for the railroad alone to solve, but the time is near at hand when every railroad system in Michigan will be forced to follow a similar course and transportation will be so seriously affected that the entire state will suffer as a consequence. Every community in Michigan, now being served by a railroad, has a real problem confronting it. It is easy to occupy a seat in a bus during the balmy days of summer and autumn, but when the winter storms are over the world the old passenger coach again becomes the haven of our desire when we would journey hither and yon. The bus is with us and it will remain but in our desire to accept this mode of transportation we should not forget at the same time it is to our interest to see that the railroads of this state are protected from complete financial collapse.

THINGS WE LIKE

This cake recipe has been given before but is a great favorite when eggs are scarce and high:

Apple Sauce Cake. — Cream one-half cupful of butter, add one cupful of sugar gradually, one and one-half cupfuls of apple sauce strained and sweetened, one cupful of seedless raisins, two cupfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of hot water, two teaspoonfuls of soda, one teaspoonful each of cinnamon and cloves. Bake in a loaf.

Caramel Cream Pie.—Take two-thirds of a cupful of sugar, add three tablespoonfuls of softened butter, one-half cupful of sweet milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in the milk, one well-beaten egg and one and one-half cupfuls of flour sifted with one teaspoonful of cream of tartar; add the milk alternately with the flour. Beat well and bake in two layers.

Filling.—Caramelize one-half cupful of sugar by stirring until melted in an iron frying pan. Add the sugar when a golden brown sirup to one cupful of milk and one-half cupful of cream, let this dissolve, add one-half cupful of sugar, one-third cupful of flour and cook twenty minutes, then add an egg yolk, stir well and add a teaspoonful of vanilla. This pie may be covered with a caramel frosting, using some of the caramel to color and flavor the sugar sirup, pour over a beaten white of an egg and flavor with vanilla.

Maple Custards.—Beat six eggs, add a pinch of salt and one-half cupful of thick maple sirup with three cupfuls of milk, mix well and pour into custard cups; set in hot water and bake until firm.

Spiced Bananas.—Take two teaspoonfuls each of cinnamon, allspice, one-half cupful of water, one-half cupful of lemon juice, one cupful of sugar, set on the fire and bring to the boiling point. Put in six bananas and boil until tender. Serve on a hot platter with the sauce poured around it.

King Tommy

"TOMMY'S AUNT"

SYNOPSIS. — In London the teller of the story of the adventures of "King Tommy," and known hereafter as "Uncle Bill," is informed by Lord Norheys, son of an old friend, that Lord Troyte, head of the British foreign office, Norheys' uncle, has a scheme to make him (Norheys) king of Lystria, in central Europe, through marriage to Calypso, daughter of King Wladislaws, deposed monarch of that country. A financier, Procopius Cable, knows there is oil in profusion in Lystria, and with an English king on the throne the output could be secured for England. Norheys, in love with a stage dancer, Viola Temple, is not enthusiastic over the proposition. The patriarch, Menelaus, highest ecclesiastical dignitary in Lystria, is heartily in favor of the restoration of the monarchy, and Cable has generously financed the sentiment. Calypso is making a living dancing in the "Mascotte," Berlin cabaret. Norheys refuses to entertain the idea of giving up Viola Temple, to whom he is secretly engaged. "Uncle Bill's" sister Emily urges him to secure a passport from Lord Troyte for a certain Janet Church, strong-minded female who wants to visit Lystria in the interests of a society for world peace. Janet Church leaves for Berlin. "Uncle Bill" is again appealed to by his sister to find a certain curate (name not given) who has left his parish in Ireland for a visit to Berlin, and cannot be found. Lord Norheys and Viola Temple disappear from London. Procopius Cable receives information that Norheys, with the princess, has left there on his way to Lystria, but Norheys appears with the former Viola Temple, now his wife. The question is, "Who is the man who has gone to Lystria with the Princess Calypso?" Casimir introduces himself, and Janet Church, vainly seeking from the British consulate a passport to Lystria, becomes acquainted with the two men in the Adlon hotel. Tommy mistakes Casimir for a hotel thief and refuses him admission to his room. Casimir insists on Tommy dining at the Mascotte. Tommy again meets Janet in a telephone booth, where he had gone in an attempt to escape from Casimir.

The door of the telephone box opened and Janet Church came out. Casimir, like Tommy, recognized her at once, though he had only seen her once before and then in a dressing gown and boudoir cap. He was not particularly pleased. Perhaps she had talked to him in the morning as she had been talking to the third secretary at the embassy. He bowed to her, but he moved away.

"Please," he said to Tommy, "half ten at the Mascotte. Till then—" He pulled himself together and produced another quotation. " 'Now, good digestion wait on appetite, and health on both.' "

With another bow he turned, crossed the hall and passed the whirling glass door, narrowly escaping a determined effort of the guardian boy to hit him in the back.

Janet Church watched him till he vanished. Then she turned to Tommy.

"I've been asking questions about that young man," she said, "and I find he's in Berlin on some kind of secret mission connected with the ex-king of Lystria."

"Oh, is he?" said Tommy. "I thought he was a tout for a night club."

"That's what he pretends to be perhaps," said Janet, "but he is strongly suspected of being engaged in some royalist plot. The third secretary at our embassy told me so this morning."

If the third secretary had been indiscreet enough to tell Janet Church anything about anybody it must have been before she began talking to him about her passports. No young man, unless he was reduced to terror by threats of violence would have spoken to her at all afterward. But I do not think it at all likely that any diplomatist, even a third secretary, would have shouted confidential information into a telephone. It seemed to me much more likely that Janet Church had been making inquiries about Casimir from the head waiter or the hall porter. All porters of hotels like the Adlon know a great many things, both true and untrue.

"I suppose he's a friend of yours," said Janet.

"No, he isn't," said Tommy. "I mean neither of them is."

He was uncertain at the moment whether she was speaking of Count Casimir or the third secretary.

"Just come over with me to a quiet place," said Janet. "I want to talk to you."

Tommy followed her, unwillingly, to a retired corner of the hall, and sat down beside her on a deep sofa. A waiter hovered round them and asked whether they wanted cocktails. Janet drove him away at once.

"I'm not asking you to tell me who you are," she said, "or what you're doing here."

"I don't in the least mind telling you. I'm a curate and I'm in Berlin for a holiday."

"Very well," said Janet grimly, "and Count Casimir is a restaurant tout, and I'm the prima ballerina of the Royal opera house in Vienna."

Janet prides herself on the power of sarcasm.

"Surely," said Tommy, "you can't be—"

He was an innocent and inexperienced young man. But even to him Janet Church did not look like a prima ballerina.

"I'm just as much a dancer as you're a curate. But, as I said to begin with, I don't want to ask questions. It's quite enough for me to know that you're an intimate friend of Count Casimir's."

"I'm not," said Tommy, "but I suppose it's no use my saying so."

"And I want you to introduce me to him."

"I'll do that with the greatest pleasure," said Tommy, "if I ever see him again. But I don't expect I shall."

"You'll see him tonight at the Mascotte," said Janet.

"I'm not going to the Mascotte."

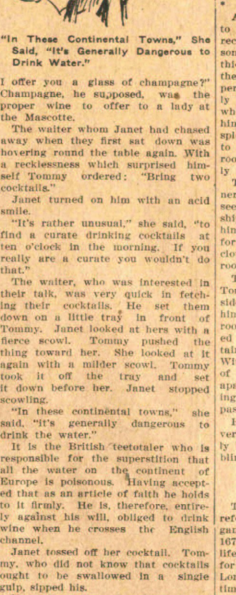
"Oh, yes, you are," said Janet. "I heard you making an appointment to meet Count Casimir there. I shall be there too and you can introduce us."

"Very well," said Tommy, helplessly. "Be there at half past ten."

A feeling of recklessness born of bewilderment was beginning to lay hold on Tommy. He did not in the least want to introduce Janet Church to any one. He did not at that moment even know her name. He did not want to see any more of Count Casimir. He did not want— But a curate is only a man, and though Tommy had no intention of entangling himself with an unknown lady at the Mascotte, he thought it might be interesting to see her, speak to her, perhaps to offer her a glass of wine. Tommy was inexperienced in such matters, but he thought that any lady to be met at the Mascotte would probably expect to be offered a glass of wine.

"Of course," said Janet, "I have more or less made Count Casimir's acquaintance already." She was thinking of her interview with him in the corridor outside Tommy's bedroom. "But it's always better to have a formal introduction," she added.

Tommy was not paying much attention to what she said. He was thinking of the lady at the Mascotte and wondering whether his phrase book provided the German for "May I offer you a glass of champagne?" Champagne, he supposed, was the proper wine to offer to a lady at the Mascotte.



"In These Continental Towns," She Said, "It's Generally Dangerous to Drink Water."

The waiter whom Janet had chased away when they first sat down was hovering round the table again. With a recklessness which surprised himself Tommy ordered: "Bring two cocktails."

Janet turned on him with an acid smile.

"It's rather unusual," she said, "to find a curate drinking cocktails at ten o'clock in the morning. If you really are a curate you wouldn't do that."

The waiter, who was interested in their talk, was very quick in fetching their cocktails. He set them down on a little tray in front of Tommy. Janet looked at hers with a fierce scowl. Tommy pushed the thing toward her. She looked at it again with a milder scowl. Tommy took it off the tray and set it down before her. Janet stopped scowling.

"In these continental towns," she said, "it's generally dangerous to drink the water."

It is the British teetotaler who is responsible for the superstition that all the water on the continent of Europe is poisonous. Having accepted that as an article of faith he holds to it firmly. He is, therefore, entirely against his will, obliged to drink wine when he crosses the English channel.

Janet tossed off her cocktail. Tommy, who did not know that cocktails ought to be swallowed in a single gulp, sipped his.

Now, the effect of cocktails taken on almost empty stomachs by people unused to wine of any sort is surprising. Janet became confidential. She told Tommy that the officials of the British Foreign office had conspired together to prevent her going to Lystria, and that Lord Edmund Troyte was the head of the conspiracy. They knew that if Janet once got into personal touch with the patriarch of Lystria the Union of Christian churches would be accomplished and a great world peace established.

"They are afraid of that," she said grimly, "afraid of it because they know that a world peace would put an end to their trade of secret diplomacy. That is why I want to be introduced to Count Casimir."

It was a little difficult for Tommy to follow the working of her mind. I do not know that any one at that time could have guessed exactly what she meant. Looking back over the whole thing now it seems plain that with the help of Casimir she hoped to get into Lystria without a passport. He was, as she had somehow managed to discover, a conspirator and a secret agent. He would therefore have no objection to breaking the law and would almost certainly be in a position to do so successfully. With his help she would get into touch with the patriarch, unite the churches, establish peace, and so—

"The Foreign office won't be pleased when they hear of it," she said vindictively, "and Lord Edmund Troyte will be furious. But the first thing is to get to Lystria. And Count Casimir can do that for me if he will."

"I've no doubt that he will," said Tommy politely.

"I'm very glad to hear you say that, for, of course, you know."

"I don't know in the least," said Tommy. "I don't really know anything. Indeed, if you asked me this minute, I could not tell you where Lystria is."

Tommy finished the last sip of his cocktail. He felt elated and extremely cheerful.

"In introducing you this evening," he said, "shall I tell Casimir all about the world peace and the Christian churches, or shall I simply say that you're my aunt?"

"I am averse to any form of deceit," said Janet. "But—"

"There are times—" said Tommy. "He might not grasp the full significance of my mission to Lystria."

"Then I'd better tell him you're my aunt," said Tommy, "unless you'd rather I said sister."

Janet looked at Tommy. He is only twenty-six and looks younger, owing no doubt to the virtuous life he has had to lead under the eye of my sister Emily. Janet is superior to the desire to appear younger than she is, which is supposed to be a weakness of her sex.

"You'd better say aunt," she said.

"Very well," said Tommy. "My aunt, who is looking after me."

"A young man," said Janet, "is the better off having an aunt to look after him in a city like Berlin. I feel sure that the Mascotte is a dangerous and undesirable place."

* * * * * * *

At half past nine Tommy drove up to the door of the Mascotte. He was received by a stately man in a handsome uniform and led up a flight of thickly carpeted marble stairs. At the top he was handed over to a supercilious young lady with startlingly red lips and very pallid cheeks, who took his overcoat and hat from him. Under the guidance of another splendidly clad retainer he passed into a very large and most impressive room. The lights were dim and faintly pink. The air was heavily scented.

Tommy looked round him a little nervously. He hoped that he might see Janet Church. Her companionship would have sustained and helped him. But she was not there. Except for six servitors in gold and purple clothes, there was no one in the room.

Two of these men took charge of Tommy. They walked one on each side of him, both a little in front of him. They conducted him across the room. At the far side of it they halted in front of a pair of heavy curtains which hung over an archway. With a solemn and dignified sweep of their arms they pulled the curtains apart to right and left. Then, bowing low, they motioned Tommy to pass on.

He entered a still larger room, very brilliantly lighted, so brilliantly lighted that for a minute he stood blinking, unable to see distinctly.

Authority on Cards

The expression "according to Hoyle" refers to Edmond Hoyle, a writer on games, who was born in England in 1672. Little is known about Hoyle's life. Tradition says he was educated for the bar. At any rate, he went to London, where he spent much of his time writing on games and giving lessons in card playing, especially whist. He published a book in which he systematized the laws and rules of whist, a game on which he was considered an authority. His name became proverbial as an authority on games.

Playing a game "according to Hoyle" came to mean playing it fair and according to the recognized rules. Hoyle died in London in 1769.—Kansas City Star.

Music of the Orient Is Harsh and Strident

The idea as to what real music really is varies according to race and environment. Music of the Orient is apt to jar upon sensitive occidental ears. Take the question of drums as an instance. The playing of drums in European orchestras has reached a high standard of art, though it is rare that more than three or four are used. In a Burmese orchestra, however, the two principal instruments are one made of a series of drums called the seingweing and a similar series of gongs called the kyee or gongs graduated in size, the drums being played with the fingers and hands and the gongs with knobsticks. Besides these there are cymbals, tom-toms and castanets, the last-named being much larger than the European instruments and made of bamboo. Of wind instruments there are only a number of clarinets and one flute played by the leader or conductor. String instruments are not used, and there are also no brass instruments.

Church to Be Home

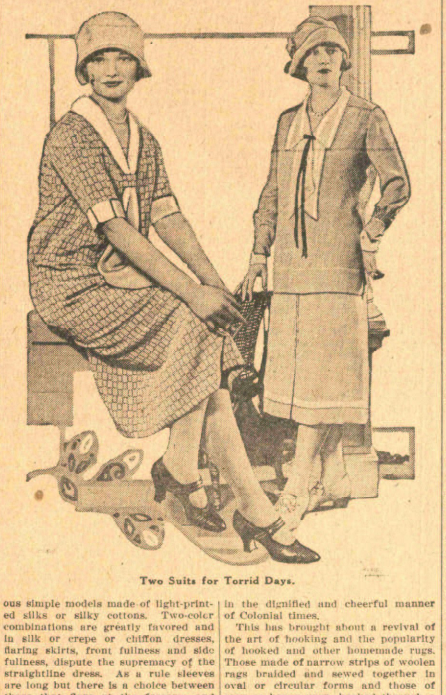
In Belgravia street, in London, there is a church building that for many years has been in disuse. Recently it was bought by a woman resident of the community and she is converting it into a residence. She obtained possession at a public auction.

It is 150 years since the first bottle glass factory in America was established at Glassboro, N. J.

COOL FROCKS FOR HOT DAYS; COLONIAL FURNISHINGS BACK

EVER hotter, hotter, hotter glares the sun in town and country—ever thinner, briefer, cooler grow the frocks and suits we live in. As the thermometer mounts mercilessly upward stylists consider ways and means for clothing womankind in the least burdensome of fabrics, made in the simplest styles—and for once in the history of the race, mere man regards his sisters enviously. Midsummer finds them clad in delicate and beautiful frocks and suits that weigh nothing and are all but transparent. What is more, they are, as a rule, inexpensive—they look cool and are cool.

As for frocks, morning, afternoon and evening find women wearing various simple models made of light-printed silks or silky cottons. Two-color combinations are greatly favored and in silk or crepe or chiffon dresses, flaring skirts, front fullness and side fullness, dispute the supremacy of the straightline dress. As a rule sleeves are long but there is a choice between those that flare at the forearm and those that fit closely. Neck lines are varied but easy and cool. In the printed chiffon frocks for afternoon they are usually round and many of these are sleeveless. Dainty or daring prints are depended upon to give interest to morning and sports frocks like that shown in the picture.



Two Suits for Torrid Days.

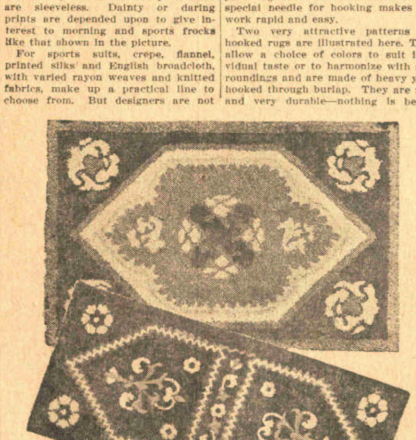
For sports suits, crepe, flannel, printed silks and English broadcloth, with varied rayon weaves and knitted fabrics, make up a practical line to choose from. But designers are not hampered in choice of materials and some of them have appropriated chiffon or sheer printed crepes for sports models; going to the last extreme in delicacy of fabrics. Striped mohair is a fine medium for a cool but substantial suit like that pictured and this is an ideal model for traveling or touring. White collar and cuffs, of crepe de chine are removable and washable and lend to the mohair suit a bit of softness that it needs. The fabric shows a hairline stripe on a colored or black ground and the design pictured is particularly becoming to slender figures.

Many women prefer to clothe their feet and heads in white and this convenient mode is approved, but white shoes piped with a color to match the color in the dress are making an impression, and those who can indulge in many hats may add a variety in light colors to their dependable white headwear.

If you are the proud possessor of a genuine antique—in a patchwork quilt, a quaint sampler, hand-woven blanket or counterpane or a homemade rug, now is the time to point with pride to this early American objet d'art. Even reproductions of our early craftsmanship in home furnishings are selling at a premium and there is a demand for beautiful patchwork and especially for homemade rugs. This demand comes from the best people and happy the flapper who can stow away in her hope chest even a copy of the possessions of her great, great, great-grandmother. The rich are making collections of old pieces or copies of them and furnishing at least one room in the dignified and cheerful manner of Colonial times.

This has brought about a revival of the art of hooking and the popularity of hooked and other homemade rugs. Those made of narrow strips of woolen rags braided and sewed together in oval or circular forms and those of rags or heavy yarn, hooked through a foundation in the quaint and handsome patterns of the originals are in demand by interior decorators. The yarn rugs are the handsomest and a special needle for hooking makes the work rapid and easy.

Two very attractive patterns for hooked rugs are illustrated here. They allow a choice of colors to suit individual taste or to harmonize with surroundings and are made of heavy yarn hooked through burlap. They are rich and very durable—nothing is better worth while as a return for time spent in making it. With hooked rugs on the floor, glazed chintz curtains at the windows, a four-post bedstead covered with a pretty patchwork quilt—all modern copies of old designs—what relics of the past we may possess in pictures, vases, perfume bottles and the like will show to advantage. Such a room gives one a wonderful sense of home.



Homemade Rugs in Pretty Designs.

The two very attractive patterns for rugs, made of heavy yarn, shown here are of the sort that never grows tiresome. In colors, dark reds, strong blues, brown and tan, with touches of green, are found to harmonize with almost any color scheme in the home.

Snake-Skin Gloves

The newest gloves from London are of snake or lizard skin. The python furnishes the largest source of supply, but many gloves are made from the skins of smaller snakes with more brilliant markings.

New Fabric

A new material which suggests all kinds of possibilities is serge which comes in interesting plaided designs and smart-color combinations.

Tunics of Lace

The awakened interest in laces is exemplified in frocks which have a very long straight tunic of heavy real lace in a deep cream tone worn over a slip of black satin.

Some of the Parisian summer hats have only half a brim. That is they are made with the brim extremely wide and drooping on one side and extremely narrow on the other.

Human Happiness Not to Be Bought

It was the keenly observant La Rochefoucauld who said that whatever might be the apparent difference between fortunes there was always a certain compensation of good and evil which rendered them equal. I am inclined to believe that this is true. I can no longer look upon myself as one singled out from the herd, but I have learned much by being merged with the herd.

I know that though extreme poverty is a blight and a curse, yet the greatest satisfactions are not those which can be bought with money. This sounds like sour grapes platitudinously expressed, but it is not. It is a deep truth which I have learned by observing both the well-to-do and the poor at close range. I have learned, too, how comparatively valueless are possessions as contributors to human happiness.—Edith Summers Kelley, in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan.

Ingenious Cat

An innocent-looking black cat, which is the pet of a Burlington (Vt.) store, was seen to leap up on the counter and get into the egg basket, says the Boston Globe. The cat proceeded to push one of the eggs out with its paws and when it broke on the floor, jumped down and ate the egg, leaving the shell. Then and there the store mystery of the broken eggshells on the floor was solved. And a short time after that, the cat excelled itself. A glass jar of chicken was in a basket, and craving a little solid food, the cat pushed the rather heavy jar off the counter. It went after the chicken and ate everything but the glass.

Ancient Egg

Workmen excavating the new basement under the courthouse at Centreville, Md., unearthed a hen's egg which may be older than the building itself, which was built nearly 200 years ago. The egg was found at a point beneath the building where it would have been impossible for a hen to go. It is assumed that the egg was laid while the building was being constructed. The shell is in perfect condition, but the contents have long ago died up.

Large Beaver Fur Sale

The largest beaver fur sale by the provincial government game guardian's department for some years past was put through a few years ago, when 216 pelts were sold to Alberta dealers. The average price realized was $12.78, and the top price in the lot was $100 for three particularly fine skins.

Ancient Dispensary

About 4600 B. C. a public dispensary was established in Egypt, the medical attendant for which received the equivalent of $500 a year for his services. This was at that time about five times the amount received by a skilled laborer.

Island Population Density

Electric Street Railways

With one exception all of the cities of the United States having a population of 25,000 or more have electric street railways. These electric street car lines represent a total investment of $5,625,000,000, which constitutes 2 per cent of the nation's wealth, and last year they provided transportation for a total of 16,000,000,000 people, which is equal to 140 rides for every inhabitant of the United States.

J. J. Blaine, governor of Wisconsin is an individual who does not play at the game of following the leader or of following the crowd merely because he thinks it will be popular to do so. Blaine is the only governor in this country who declined to accept the suggestion of President Coolidge that he call out the military units of the state to parade around the streets of the various cities in a militaristic jingoistic attitude on the 4th of July. There are those who believe that these parades will frighten other nations into an attitude of respect for this country but such believers are poorly acquainted with the deeds and misdeeds of the past for it is a fact of history that marching armies never were a symbol of peace but rather a symbol of war and marching armies produce hatred, jealousy and fear among the nations of the earth. If a man carries a revolver around in his pocket it is a sign that he intends to use it and if a nation gets into the habit of gun toting our conclusions must be the same. The American Legion the G. A. R., the K. K. K. and the womans clubs of the country are behind these sword waving moments but Christ said "They who take the sword shall perish by the sword."

The other day we picked up a Jackson paper and right there in print it said "Harold Shults married to a young lady in Pontiac." Then we looked again. Sure, that's what it said. After recovering from the shock we investigated and found it wasn't our Harold at all but another of the same name in Jackson, and our chances for an interesting item had gone aft-agley. There are so many people over there toting local people's names, we wonder how it all comes about. They should get a license if they want to cop our names.

We are reliably informed that Henry Ford is now perfecting plans for a new car which he will issue somewhere about August 1st. He will equip this car with sliding transmission, longer wheel base, lower body and make it like a real car. We do not think he will change the world famous Ford engine because there is no use trying to improve this little triumph of his genius. Henry knows how to make 'em and it is common now to see a Ford engine pounding away when the body and wheels have long since been gathered to their fathers. Quite frequently we see specimens of the first Model T Ford running about our highways today which is something you never will be able to say of any other make of car.

Why Sheetrock is a different wallboard

What it is: Sheetrock is gypsum plaster cast in thick, rigid sheets. It is fireproof, non-warping and permanent. It can be sawed and nailed like lumber. Takes any decoration—wall paper, paint, or Textone in the new stipple finishes.

What it does: Sheetrock makes solid, highly insulating walls and ceilings that keep rooms warm in winter and cool in summer. That means more comfort and lower fuel bills. Then, too, Sheetrock walls and ceilings make buildings dust-tight, soundproof and vermin-proof.

Where it is used: Sheetrock is the economical wall and ceiling material for many types of new construction and for all remodeling and repairs. It is just the thing for attic rooms, furnace rooms, fruit cellars, garages, offices and stores.

Where to get it: Get your Sheetrock from us. We carry it in standard ceiling heights and widths. Our trucks make prompt deliveries.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped where Other Medicines Failed

Walpole, N. H.—"I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find it has improved my health wonderfully. For months and months I was not regular and had terrible pains. They used to affect my side so I could not work. I read of others being helped by the Vegetable Compound, so I thought it might help me. I am very much better now, strong enough to do my own housework, and have two dear babies to care for besides. I tried other medicines before taking the Vegetable Compound, but I was never treated for my troubles. I speak highly of the Vegetable Compound to my friends and recommend it to any woman for run-down and nervous condition."—Mrs. T. H. FULLER, Walpole, New Hampshire.

Over 200,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 out of every 100 of the replies say, "Yes" and because the Vegetable Compound has been helping other women it should help you. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Remarkable Feat of Engineering

An engineer in the West some time ago encountered a real problem in making a stream cross a stream. In order to accomplish this unique feat of engineering, he built above the main stream a concrete bridge or trough through which stream No. 2 might pass. In a word the situation was this: An irrigating canal 12 feet wide and 4 feet deep ran through a certain stretch of country. Running at right angles to this ditch, are a number of natural storm drains. It was desired that these storm drains should not empty into the main ditch and to avoid this bridges were constructed. The water in the main ditch is used to irrigate valuable orchard land, while that from the various washes goes direct to a nearby river.

The bridge is 15 feet in width and 60 in length. Its walls are 8 inches thick and 42 inches in height.

Prove Safety in Flight

Persons who still are fearful of traveling in airplanes might well examine recently issued statistics of the army air service, says Popular Science Monthly. Between the fall of 1922 and the spring of this year army fliers have covered almost 700,000 miles over the model airways system without a single death. About 700 passengers have been carried, and 60,000 pounds of express matter. There have been 15 crashes in this period, but only one man has been injured.

Doesn't common sense begin with patience? We should think so.

WHY SHOULD ANYONE SUFFER WITH INDIGESTION OR ANY STOMACH MISERY?

If you want to fix up your dyspeptic, out of order stomach so that you can relish what you eat with not the least bit of after distress, do what tens of thousands of people have already done.

Getting rid of gas, bloating, belching, heaviness and that feeling of near suffocation isn't such a hard matter as you may think—You've been getting hold of the wrong medicine—that's all.

But better late than never—ask your druggist for a bottle of Dare's Mentha Pepsin—a real stomach medicine and a very pleasant one. For acute indigestion one or two doses is enough, but when the trouble is chronic, two or three bottles may be needed to put your disordered stomach in good healthy condition and make life worth living.

Making a start is the main thing, so why not get one bottle today with the distinct understanding that if it doesn't help you the purchase price will be returned.

Evolution Trial in Dayton, Tenn., Draws Attention of the Civilized World.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

DESPITE all the jokes, sneers and laughter, the evolution trial that opened last week in the little town of Dayton, Tenn., is bound to attract popular attention, not alone in America but throughout the civilized world. Of course the statement of William Jennings Bryan that Christianity is on trial is oratorical flubdub. No more accurate is the statement that the theory of evolution is on trial. But if the peple read understandingly the evidence to be offered by experts, many thousands of them will learn that their former conception of that theory was utterly mistaken. Mr. Bryan, two days before the case was called, said publicly that the Tennessee anti-evolution law "simply prohibits the evolutionists from using the public schools for the purpose of substituting their kind of religion for the religion of the masses." This did not please the counsel for the defense, who seek to make the constitutionality of the law the main issue and religion secondary. Prof. John R. Neal, senior counsel for Scopes, said:

"We regard Mr. Bryan's speech as the most remarkable utterance ever made by a lawyer just before his entrance into a trial of a criminal case. His speech comes as a challenge to the defense not to confine the test of the anti-evolution law to the existing limitation of the constitution of Tennessee or even the United States, but, instead, to put on trial the truth or lack of truth of the theory of evolution; the conflict or lack of conflict between science and religion, having demonstrated, as he apparently expects to do, at least to his own satisfaction, that evolution is untrue and that it is destructive to Christianity."

Mr. Bryan's arrival in Dayton was made the occasion for a great demonstration. He was greeted as a hero, escorted to his temporary home by a long parade and banqueted by the leading club of the village, before which he did a lot of advance arguing of the Scopes case. The attorneys for the defense and some of their experts—scientists and ministers—also arrived in the town. But Bainbridge Colby, who was to be associated with Professor Neal, Clarence Darrow, Dudley Field Malone and Arthur Garfield Hays in the defense, telegraphed that he was detained by a case in New York. He may show up later if his services are needed. Earlier in the week the defense made a somewhat perfunctory attempt to get from Federal Judge Gore in Cookeville, Tenn., an injunction to halt the trial, citing the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. The judge denied the petition on the ground that he had no power to interfere with state courts except in bankruptcy proceedings, that the allegations were insufficient and that he was not in the district where the alleged offense was committed. Needless to say, this ruling was a great relief to Dayton.

Perhaps fresh ammunition for the Scopes defense is provided in a newly published report of biological researches at Johns Hopkins, in which it is stated that Dr. Herbert Spencer Jennings, director of the biological laboratory, is the first man "actually to see and control the process of evolution among living things." According to the report:

"The evidence of evolution had been read in the rocks and the structures of plants and animals, but under the microscope Doctor Jennings was able to follow evolution not as a theory but as a thing that was actually taking place."

"Intensified study," Doctor Jennings declares, "reveals that the hereditary characteristics do become changed by external conditions. Through such diversities, continuing for great numbers of generations, single stocks, uniform in their hereditary characteristics, gradually differentiate into many faintly differing hereditary features.

"In higher organisms the state of knowledge on this point appears less satisfactory. But the evidence, so far as it goes, indicates that processes here are in agreement with those in lower organisms."

FOREIGN MINISTER TCHITCHERIN and his colleagues seem determined to bring about a break between Russia and Great Britain over the Chinese situation, and have been bombarding Downing street with provocative notes demanding the release of Dosser, the Russian strike fomenter arrested in Shanghai, denying the jurisdiction of the mixed tribunal in his case and finally challenging the whole status of British subjects in China under the extraterritorial rights granted to foreign concessions by previous treaties with China. Similar notes of protest were sent to the Chinese government by Moscow. This straining of relations, coupled with a row between Germany and Russia over the arrest and sentence to death of some German students who were convicted of being anti-soviet plotters, gave rise to fears that widespread hostilities might break out shortly. But the British cabinet took things calmly and Foreign Minister Chamberlain somewhat reassured anxious members of parliament by stating that the government was not preparing to break off relations with Russia. He added, however, that it was closely watching the current of events, and reiterated a previous assertion that the government "must retain liberty of action."

The Reds overlook no opportunity to stir up trouble. When a British fleet visited Oslo, Norway, last week the Communists there appealed to the members of the crews, urging them to "rise in revolt rather than to obey your government if you are ordered to make war on Russia."

From Riga comes a story that Great Britain has asked Germany to publish all the documents in connection with the German general staff's transporting of Lenin and his aids from Switzerland in 1917 and to disclose the amount of money paid them to stage the Bolshevik revolution. Moscow is said to be much worried by this, fearing the disclosures would seriously weaken the authority of the Communist party and the prestige of the Soviet government.

Russia also is becoming involved in new difficulties with Poland. Recently there have been a number of attacks by Russian soldiers on Polish frontier posts, and more than two hundred Soviet emissaries have been arrested in eastern Poland within a few days.

IT BEGINS to look as if France would have to send hundreds of thousands of troops to Morocco as reinforcements, if Abd-el-Krim is to be stopped—and maybe even that would not do it. The Riffian leader, who calls himself sultan of Morocco, has been making a series of fierce attacks on the French line between Taza and Fez and his troops are not far from the latter city, his main objective. His propaganda among the tribes hitherto friendly to the French is taking effect and some of them have joined his standard, while others have been disarmed by the French. Should Krim be able to take Fez and overthrow Sultan Muley Youssef there would almost certainly be a general uprising throughout Morocco in favor of the Riff leader. Realizing this, Marshal Lyautey is hurrying tanks, artillery, cavalry and machine guns to the line north of the capital to hold Krim back until reinforcements arrive from France. Premier Painleve has said the Riffians are aided by Turkish and German officers, and now a government newspaper in Paris gives details of the German, Russian and Turkish intrigues in the Riff. Among other things, it says 100 Moslem officers from Batum were landed secretly on the Riff coast not long ago from a Turkish ship. Spain and France have agreed on a combined land blockade of the Riff war zone to supplement the sea blockade, and also have reached an accord on political co-operation in Morocco. They will offer Krim autonomy in the Riff under a Spanish protectorate. Gen. Stanislaus Naulin has been made French commander-in-chief in Morocco.

SUCCESSFUL bank robberies have become so common that bankers all over the country have been seeking some means to combat the bandits. Those of Cook county, Illinois, have gone to the extreme of offering $2,500 reward for the death of each bank robber. Meanwhile a device tried in Elnora, Ind., seems to offer the way out. Lewisite, the most deadly of gases invented during the war, is placed in glass containers which shatter at the least disturbance of the vault. The Elnora robbers were put to flight by the gas without any plunder.

FEDERAL prohibition officers on the shore of Lake Ontario were making all preparation last week to try to drive back a tidal wave of liquor from Canada but admitted they were handicapped by lack of facilities. They had received word that an armada of 17 vessels was loading at Port Colborne, Ont., and would soon make a dash for the United States with cargoes valued at more than $250,000. The chief enforcement agent at Buffalo said his men could do nothing until the liquor was landed.

By order of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrews, there will be no more speechmaking by women prohibition agents designed as educational efforts to create sentiment in favor of enforcement.

THOMAS LEE WOOLWINE, whose name was familiar throughout the country a few years ago when he was district attorney of Los Angeles, Cal., is dead at his home in Los Angeles. He was prosecutor in the sensational trials of Madalynne Obenchain, accused of the murder of J. Belton Kennedy, and for a long time he was a prominent figure in California politics.

BECAUSE of its "inability to comply with the provisions of the Capper-Volstead act, under which it was incorporated," the Grain Marketing company, that ambitious co-operative enterprise which took over several large grain companies of the Middle West, is to liquidate and dissolve. The properties and business contributed by the component concerns will be returned to them and already two of them, the Armour Grain company and Rosenbaum Bros., have been readmitted to membership in the Chicago Board of Trade clearing house and will resume trading. The Grain Marketing company, it was announced, would pay its bank debt and other indebtedness as it matures.

"The plan to sell the properties to the farmers was too ambitious," said Emanuel F. Rosenbaum, export director of the concern. "There was considerable doubt as to whether the properties were worth $16,000,000. There isn't much doubt that some of the elevator values were inflated."

Directly resulting from the non-success of this enterprise came the failure of the big Chicago and New York brokerage house of Dean, Onativia & Company, which handled the Rosenbaum stock in the concern. It went into the hands of a receiver with liabilities of approximately $35,000,000, but it was believed the net loss would not exceed $5,000,000. Creditors of the company and bankers made a determined effort last week to rehabilitate it.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE plans to spend some of his vacation time in trying to develop a farm legislation program that will satisfy all groups and stand a chance of getting through congress next winter. He has invited a number of Middle West senators, representatives and farm experts to confer with him at White Court. One of the first of these to visit the President will be Senator Curtis of Kansas.

SPEAKING of grain and farming, it is interesting to read that the rulers of soviet Russia are planning to export immense quantities of grain from that country next winter, despite the near-famine that prevails every year in various districts. With that end in view the authorities have been importing a vast deal of agricultural implements and are encouraging the farmers to raise large crops. However, the peasants may hang back for they do not relish the way in which the government takes their grain at fixed prices.

Figures Show Europe Returning to Normal

Washington.—The splendid financial, economic and commercial improvement noted in Europe enabled that group of countries to increase their purchases from the United States by $212,000,000 during the first five months of 1925, over the corresponding months in 1924, according to figures made public by the Department of Commerce. Imports to the United States from Europe increased $64,000,000 during the same period.

"Our exports to Europe during the early months of this year amounted to $1,127,366,000, more than a $200,000,000 increase over the corresponding five months of 1924, when they reached valuations of $915,222,000, or a gain of 4 per cent," said the report.

"Total United States shipments abroad during the time under discussion amounted to $2,055,160,000, as against $1,782,734,000 during the 1924 five months' period. Thus it is seen that our increased shipments to Europe accounted for 55 per cent of our exports to the whole world.

"In addition our purchases from European countries for the same period, making up 29 per cent of our total world imports, showed an increase of $63,930,000, or 15 per cent, in totaling $503,974,000, compared with $440,044,000 for the earlier period.

"In the case of Great Britain the steady improvement of the pound sterling, with an absolute absence of widespread fluctuations, advanced our trade with that country."

Iron Mountain—Another state police post for the upper peninsula is to be established in this city, according to a plan under consideration by the state department of public safety. Captain Downing said this county would serve as a central point for policing four other counties.

Lansing—A proposal by the National Guard that the state purchase of the Manistee and Northeastern railroad was turned down by the administrative board. The M. & N. E. is seeking to abandon its lines. It was pointed out the spur is needed to provide rail access to the National Guard Camp.

Big Rapids—A 30-foot power dam will be constructed on the Muskegon River About one mile north of Paris, it is announced by W. H. Allswede, of Hersey. The new dam will supply farmers and towns in this territory with power. A corporation will be formed with a capital of $1,000,000 according to present plans.

Muskegon—"Krip," a bull dog, gave his life in protecting Miss Mable Hilt, its owner, at the Hilt summer camp near Grand Haven. A big rattlesnake entered the camp and while Charles Hilt, a brother of Mable, ran for a club, the dog gave battle and killed the snake. The dog was bitten, however, and died a few hours later.

Port Huron—This city faces a suspension of street car service as the result of an ultimatum delivered by the receivers of the Detroit United Railway, which owns and operates the city electric railway company. The ultimatum states that unless the company is permitted to increase its fares from five to seven cents a ride it will suspend.

Manistee—Charles J. DeLand, secretary of state, has ordered the sale of automobile licenses from the office of Arnold T. Graves, missing Manistee County Treasurer, discontinued indefinitely. In the meantime state officials and county officers are making a check of the books in Graves' office to determine whether or not there is a shortage.

Battle Creek—A 140,000 volt transmission line, one of the main arteries of the Consumers' Power Co., and one of the highest voltage cables in the state, broke near Bellevue, causing wire fences to become charged with electricity for a distance of two miles, stunned two men nearly a mile away, killed two head of cattle and started a fire that destroyed 20 acres of hay.

Kalamazoo—Because he mistook Kalamazoo for Detroit, Joseph Jakerboske, of Hamtramck, spent several hours in the Kalamazoo County jail. He was arrested by an officer wandering about the streets looking for a "Michigan Car." He told Sheriff Borden that he had fallen asleep on a train from Chicago and awakening here believed he was in Detroit. He was put on an eastbound train and sent to his destination.

Ypsilanti—One hundred students short of the enrollment of the summer session of a year ago has been reported by President Charles McKenney, of the Michigan State Normal College. The falling off is due, the president states, to the fact that only 200 students are enrolled in the six weeks course, which is the minimum required by state law of teachers in rural schools. This is the last year that the six weeks minimum is permitted.

Ypsilanti—About $70,000 damage was done to the Detroit Edison power plant at Superior, a few miles from here, when lightning struck the building. Light service in Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor and neighboring towns was cut off for two hours until an emergency crew of 50 men were able to establish temporary cutovers. Although the building was partially demolished, no one was hurt, as the two men in charge of the plant at the time, had just started outside to watch the storm.

Ann Arbor—Pouring of concrete has started on Michigan's single building of the present year, the structure to house the Thomas H. Simpson memorial institute. Plans call for the completion of the building in 1926. The structure, which will house the first distinctly research unit connected with the medical school of the University of Michigan, will be 71 by 40 feet, four stories and a sub-basement. The original plans called for a brick structure but final plans call for an Indiana lime stone building.

Manistee—Pennies and nickels saved through the schools savings system by pupils of Manistee public schools during the past four years now total $3,975, according to an announcement at the close of the school year. Though eighth graders, upon graduation, separate their accounts from the schol system, the total amount of savings is growing annually and is becoming a real course in thrift for the city's children. The greatest individual account totals $137.05, but most of them are much smaller.

Port Huron—The Port Huron city commission has a problem in public utility service, which appears difficult to settle, in connection with the request of the Detroit Edison company, owners of the Port Huron gas works, for permission to reduce the standard of gas from 600 B.T.U. to 530. The city charter gives the commission the right to grant an increase in rates but the right to change the standard, which in this case will be a practical increase in price, will likely be referred to the public utilities commission or to a general city election.

Bay City—Damage estimated by the owner at between $150,000 and $175,000 was caused by fire in a furniture store here.

Grand Rapids—A friend's story caused Ford Curtis, a barber, to laugh so hard that he dislocated his jaw. The jaw was placed in its normal position at Butterworth hospital.

Traverse City—Cherry pickers have taken to the orchards, officially opening the cherry harvest in Grand Traverse region. Some of the local canning plants are handling the early fruit, but much of the sweet crop is being shipped.

Lansing—The State Administrative Board authorized the military department to accept a bid for the construction of an addition to the Benton Harbor armory. The price was $24,000, with an additional $1,000 for architects fees.

Grand Rapids—Awakened by two strangers who demanded $2,000, Agnello Giacomo, a factory worker, was made the target of a dozen revolver shots when he slammed down his bedroom window in front of them. He was not hit. The men escaped.

Jackson—By a consolidation which has been effected between the Jackson, Majestic and Rex theater companies and the W. S. Butterfield organization of Michigan theaters, the Butterfield booking offices will be in control of three of Jackson's largest theater houses.

Lansing—The Wabash Railroad desires to absorb the Ann Arbor Railroad to acquire Great Lakes car ferry facilities and to link the Michigan territory tapped by the Ann Arbor with its own system, according to a petition received by the Public Utilities Commission.

Albion—Mrs. Kate Bromeling, Albion's first woman justice of the peace, had her first criminal cases as the result of three arrests made over the Fourth. Justice Bromeling fined two who pleaded guilty to driving while intoxicated, $50 and revoked their licenses for 90 days. Another was fined $10 on a drunk charge.

Iron Mountain—Operations at the Traders mine, idle for two years, will be resumed by the Hoose & Person Construction Co., who have obtained a 15-year lease on the property from the Keweenaw Land Co. Thirty men will be employed. The company has a contract for 10,000 tons of ore and another for 20,000 is pending.

Warren—Twenty thousand persons are estimated to have attended the annual homecoming picnic, sponsored by the Warren Community Club here the Fourth. A parade, races, a ball game in which Centerline won from Warren, a tug of war between these two towns, dancing and fireworks comprised the program. No accidents were reported.

Battle Creek—An alligator, 42 inches long, was the surprising catch of William Storey, a local angler. He was fishing on Mill Lake, between Battle Creek and Hastings, when he noticed something in the water which he at first mistook for a turtle. He rigged up a fish line with several hooks and landed the alligator. It gave battle, flaying its tail furiously, he said.

Ionia—Grand river, especially that stretch of it which crosses the entire width of Ionia county, is just now about as near a dusty stream as it ever was with the rainfall for the year showing a shortage of seven inches. Many of the feeding creeks and rivulets have dried up entirely, wells and cisterns have gone dry and the year has proven one of disastrous aridness.

Battle Creek—The body of William E. Porter, 35 years old, wealthy glass manufacturer of Fort Smith, Ark., who disappeared from the sanitarium June 27, was found in a field three miles north of Battle Creek. Indications are that Porter committed suicide by slashing his wrist with a knife. Porter is said to have threatened to end his life, following a recent nervous breakdown.

Detroit—Within two or three years a large fleet of trans-atlantic freighters may be plying between Detroit and foreign ports. The maiden ship arrived in the city bringing a cargo of steel rails from Antwerp. She is the steamer Anders, belonging to the Lane company of New York City. At the Hotel Tuller, Frank Lane, president of the concern, stated that his company was prepared to bring to Detroit the European imports the city needed and would carry its exports abroad

Lansing—Both state and federal supreme court decisions will be sought on the validity of the Michigan statute of 1923 prohibiting an owner from fishing on posted property where other persons are barred, according to John Baird, director of the state department of conservation. Baird's department obtained a warrant for the arrest of Frank Collins, Toledo sportsman, who fished on his land in Lake county after he had posted it to keep other persons from enjoying similar privileges.

Fremont—A new trial is in prospect for Mrs. Alice Dudgeon, once convicted of the murder of her son-in-law, Romie Hodell, and once the victim of a jury disagreement in a second trial. William J. Branstrom, former Newaygo county prosecutor, who prosecuted both cases against Mrs. Dudgeon, said that he could not consent to an order of nolle prosequi, dismissing the charges against Mrs. Dudgeon, in the light of her first conviction and the fact that the jury in the second trial stood eight to four for conviction again.

Whitehall—Whitehall and Montague merchants have tons of food on their hands and are wondering what to do with it. At the same time the White Lake Chamber of Commerce and Mississippi Valley Power Boat Association Regatta are figuring their losses. From the attendance standpoint the regatta was a failure. The big grandstand was practically empty during the three days of racing, while merchants who stocked up with supplies of food were asking people to eat more to aid in relieving the surplus.

Lights in Coal Mines

Investigators for the bureau of mines report that electric lamps for miners are fast replacing the safety flame lights, over 200,000 of the former now being in use in the United States alone. Since 1911, when 45,000 flame lights were in use in the soft coal mines of Pennsylvania, the number has decreased to a few thousand, while the use of electric lamps has increased in inverse ratio. In early mining days tallow candles and crude open-flame lamps were used, resulting in frequent explosions and much loss of life. The flame light, however, is still considered useful, for it indicates if there is a deficiency of oxygen in the air, thus warning miners of the approach of the deadly mine gas.

What To Do in Explosions

A good many of our readers are bothered with unforseen accidents at times such as the explosion of gasoline or kerosene or a lamp. At such times it is hard to decide on the spur of the moment what one should do. We have in mind a certain time when a man was using a common gasoline blow torch, an old one which had become weak in the joints. He had it ignited and was pumping in the compressed air when a seam suddenly opened and the can exploded throwing gasoline all over the man. Under ordinary conditions one would suppose there was a strong likelihood of the man being burned to a crisp But exactly the opposite thing happened. The force of the explosion blew out the flame and extinguished it instantly. On the same principle a huge oil well in the southwest was saved. Through some mismanagement this well which was full of gas burst into a gigantic flame which roared for weeks higher than the derrick. Everything known to man was tried to put it out. They stationed big boilers near and forced live steam into the casing; they threw great quantities of mud and sand on the flame; they squirted tetrachloride a powerful chemical into the blaze and still it raged. Finally they decided to use dynamite. Bombs of this explosive were prepared and timed to explode and then they threw them into the blaze The terrific impact of the dynamite broke the flame into three sections; the top went up, the bottom went down into the casing and the middle was forced sideways, and the whole thing squelched instantly.

If your kerosene lamp explodes don't try to put it out with water. Get a blanket or a quilt and smother the blaze; absence of air will kill it. If the lamp overturned and bursts into flame, wrap a blanket or anything around it and throw it out doors even if you have to break a window—get it out. If your clothes are afire don't rush out doors—this is the worst thing you can do. Stay inside but wrap yourself in anything you can pick up.

The Scene Changes

The United States has entered upon another phase of the struggle for enforcement of the constitutional provision requiring prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. This stage is that of vigorous federal action to enforce the law.

For several years the country has been drifting toward the situation which now confronts it. Beginning with the simple enactment of the constitutional amendment and the necessary enabling legislation there was a period of waiting for facts to reveal themselves. Federal and state officials divided responsibility and local officers waited for someone else to bring about enforcement.

What evils developed from that all of us know. Partial and spasmodic procedure favored the moon shiner, the smuggler and the bootlegger. Conditions of crime and lawlessness grew up which made many despair.

The new phase is one which promises to bring prohibition to its first actual test. Shutting off of a large part of the foreign supply decisive moves to make domestic distilling unprofitable and the prosecution of sellers of contraband liquor constitute a campaign which must be judged by its eventual results. If such methods cannot bring about the outlawing of liquor then it will be time to consider what the alternative may be.

The impetus for the whole movement comes from Washington and it may be deduced that it comes very largely from one man. Quite characteristically, that man is saying less than anyone else about what he is trying to accomplish.

Indian Magicians

Travelers to the Orient tell us that the magicians of India are probably the most expert manipulators of the mystic in the world. We have heard of the traveling magician whom one occasionally sees in Indian cities and who will apparently throw a coil of rope into the air anywhere and the rope will remain hanging from nothing; then he will require his assistants to climb this rope and disappear one after another into the ethereal space. We mistrust the relators have not given us the full story. We very much doubt that such a trick could be done in an open field with no trees or buildings of any kind.

Some have said "there is no sech derned thing ever done" but there is, and it is explained something like this; The magicians are never without a party of assistants which at times the spectator fails to see. The first thing the performer will do is to burn an incense which produces great clouds of smoke above the earth a few feet. He then throws up his coil of rope which has attached to the end two very fine strong wires and these wires are of considerable length. He is always near trees or buildings. Assistants in the trees or buildings catch these wires unseen by the crowd and stretch them across holding very tight. The rest of the trick is very easy; the boys climb the rope and follow the wires to the trees or buildings and disappear. Then again it is claimed that many of these magicians are powerful hypnotists and they can so influence a whole crowd of spectators to see things that actualiy don't exist. Whether it is one or the other, there is some mechanical explanation of the trick.

Co-Operation Is Good

Ever since the birth of Zion City, Illinois, founded by Alexander Dowie, we have been thoroughly convinced of the practicability of the experiment. Good old Benjamin Franklin (the printers' patron saint) in the days of Washington, made the timely remark that "a bundle of sticks can neither be bent nor broken" and like hundreds of his "Poor Richard" saws it is applicable to every-day philosophy.

We hope no one will construe this to mean we endorse Dowie's policies or his religious colony in common with the Benton Harbor whiskers and the notorious Holy Rollers of Chicago—far from it.

What we want to bring home with sledge hammer blows is the beauty of team work in villages and country-side communities. It is too bad that a few get the impression that town and country management goes only to the chosen ones who are born to rule, and no others need apply.

As we have read his history, Alexander Dowie, while a fanatical apostle of self aggrandizement, was nevertheless a shrewd business man of the old-fashioned type. He believed in co-operation to the extent of building up a great organization religiously, which had no peer in this country, Up to the time dissenters like Glenn Voliva rose against his management, Zion City prospered and became unique in history as the only one of its kind. Forced team work told the whole story and demonstrated the worth of co-operation. Zion became a self supporting community in the sense that everything they needed was made in the city. Dowieites were rich because their funds had been wisely handled. Nothing was lost or spent to gratify personal hobbies, Nothing went into forced improvements which the entire city did not need.

Thus, it will be seen, that team work pays in every kind of public effort. We hear a good deal about North Adams needing this and that in the way of improvements, which would cost the tax payers scads of money, and some one rises to remark that if we had fewer backsetters who practice knocking as a pastime, we could get our improvements. You bet this is true—we could get our improvements all right, and also get the corporation so badly in debt that our great grand-children would curse the day they were born, because they would be simply slaves chained to the wheel paying off the immense debts contracted by us. We don't believe in that kind of co-operation which is nothing more or less than the aggrandizement of the few at the expense of the many. We find there is a vast difference in co-operation. Some manufacturers build mammoth steam engines but always equip them with governors, lest they tear themselves to pieces. Just to illustrate how this works we might mention the fact that we needed a new street built; we got it, and the fellows who advocated a new street would have exceeded the speed limit, and built a concrete pavement just as enthusiastically, if the opposition had not held them down, because they had an exceedingly large following of the fellows who wanted something doing whether it amounted to anything or not.

On the contrary, if we needed a new fire engine or some new fire hose, which would make nobody a job and create very little disturbance, except at a fire, it is likely we would be lonesome—without co-operation.

A New Fruit for Us

At some time in the future, probably between 1935 and 1940, the masgosteen, the most famous fruit in the world, may make its commercial appearance upon the markets of the United States, says the United States Department of Agriculture. For many years it was thought that this fruit could not be cultivated outside the Asiatic Tropics, but experiments in the West Indies have proved that this is without foundation.

In the hope of providing a nucleus from which later may be developed orchards of sufficient size to supply northern markets with commercial quantities of the fruit, the department has recently sent several shipments of young trees to the Canal Zone, Costa Rica, and Honduras.

The mangosteen is unlike any fruit cultivated in the United States, and it can only be grown where the temperature never goes below 35° above zero. It is the size of the mandarin orange, deep purple, externally, with a thick, woody rind, Within are several segments of snow-white pulp of extremely delicate flavor. Because of its great delicacy and the difficulty of transporting the fruit long distances, Queen Victoria once offered a handsome reward to the first man who succeeded in placing a dish of mangosteens on her table at Buckingham Palace, but the reward was never won.

With the advent of refrigeration it has become possible to send the fruit north from the tropics without great difficulty. It seems unlikely that American markets will be supplied from Southern Asia however.

Poultry School Attracts 75

Final examinations were given Saturday to the 75 men and women enrolled in the second annual poultry and judging school during the week of July 6-11, at M. S. C. Many of those who took the course are poultry breeders and managers of Michigan hatcheries.

The course placed special emhasis on the production side of poultry, taking into account methods of culling, and judging of body comformations. Poultry leaders from the United States and Canada came to the college to give special lectures and conduct laboratory work. Those who successfully pass the examination will be given certificates.

Highlights of Radio Broadcasting

BROADCASTING FROM OUTSIDE THE STUDIO

By ALFRED N. GOLDSMITH, B. S., Ph. D., Fellow, I. R. E. Chief Broadcast Engineer, Radio Corporation of America.

The long arm of broadcasting is reaching out further and further—both to gather the program and then to scatter it again. Although broadcasting is a young art, it has already changed radically from the conditions which the broadcast listeners of a few years ago can remember. In the early days of broadcasting, the programs all originated in the studio of the broadcasting station, and every artist or speaker had to come to the studio in order to send his message to the world. This was an inconvenient plan since it required that important persons and famous artists had to leave their homes or places of business and travel to the broadcasting station, wherever it might be located, and sometimes at an inconvenient hour. Nowadays broadcasting stations which are wisely planned are located at the musical and artistic center of their city, and this has made it easier for the performers to be at the station in person.

There are, however, many types of current events which should be broadcast, but which cannot be brought physically to the studio. For example, a theatrical performance or a musical comedy is generally unavailable for studio broadcasting. So also are church services, a dinner given to a world-famous celebrity, a great concert given outdoors or in an auditorium, meetings of legislative assemblies, athletic and sporting events, and the like. In other words, there are many occasions of intense interest to the broadcast listener which, nevertheless, are not transferable from their place of usual occurrence. Fortunately broadcasting has found the means of gathering them into the station and then scattering them to its million listeners in unimpaired form.

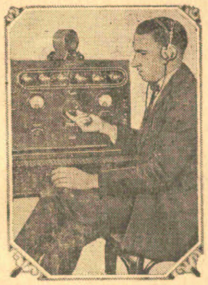
How Land Wires Aid the Studio Manager

The most common way of bringing the desired event to the broadcast station is by means of what is termed "wire line transfer" or, as it is sometimes called, "remote control." This consists in using a telephone line to connect the concert hall, for example, to the broadcasting station, and then sending the concert over the wire before broadcasting it. To do this, suitable pick-up transmitters have to be placed in the concert hall at carefully chosen locations. The music is picked up by these, and the corresponding telephone currents are amplified or strengthened by a "line amplifier." The line amplifier is a carefully designed vacuum tube amplifier, somewhat like that in a high-grade radio receiver except that extreme care is taken to maintain the quality of the music perfectly and to get a suitable amount of power out of the amplifier before sending the telephone currents over the wire from the concert hall to the broadcasting station. When these currents, which carry the music, arrive at the station they are again strengthened in the control room amplifiers of the station and are then used to control the radio telephone transmitter in just the same way as if the concert had taken place in the studio of the station. In other words, instead of controlling the radio telephone broadcasting transmitter by telephone currents coming over a short wire line from the studio at the station, it is controlled by currents which, when amplified suitably, have come over a long wire line from a distant hall. This is why the process is called wire line transfer of events originating at distant points, the transfer in question being from the distant auditorium to the broadcast station over a wire line.

Location of Microphone Vital Factor

It is very necessary to place the pick-up telephone transmitter in the concert hall with great care, the problem of a proper location for it being even more serious than in the studio at the station, where conditions are more readily controlled. If an orchestra is playing, the transmitter must be placed so that every instrument will be heard in just the right proportion of loudness and that the orchestra will stay "balanced" when its playing is reproduced for the listener. If a sermon is being broadcast, the preacher, the choir and the organ have to b submitted correctly, and this may require several pick-up transmitters skillfully placed and appropriately used by a supervising engineer. Theatrical performances are still more difficult to transmit because the actors move around the stage, do not face the transmitter except by accident, are interrupted by applause and by the frequently serious echoes which are found in theatres. Many hours of experimentation are generally required before an important event can be properly picked up for wire line transfer to the broadcasting station.

The line amplifier is a specially designed piece of equipment, as can be seen from the photograph of this article. This is the type of amplifier which was designed by the Research Department of the Radio Corporation for use at stations WJY, WJZ and WRC. The left hand box contains the batteries and some of the individual transmitter controls. The right hand box contains the tubes and amplifying apparatus as well as the important "gain control," which enables the supervising operator to regulate exactly the strength of the telephone currents which he places on the wire line to the broadcasting station. It also contains the "volume indicator," which is an instrument that visually indicates the strength of this same current and thus shows that the transfer is taking place correctly.



Line Amplifier Shown Above Strengthens Currents Flowing Between Distant Microphone and Control Room of WJZ

Exceptionally good wire lines must be used for this sort of work. If they are noisy or if they do not transmit all tones of whatever pitch equally, they will fail to give satisfaction.

The "Radio Relay"

There is another way of broadcasting outside events which is known as the "radio relay" method and which has been experimentally tried with considerable success. This involves sending the material from the concert hall, for example, to the broadcast station by radio on a special wave length and then receiving it at the broadcast station and automatically re-transmitting it on the usual wave length of the broadcasting station. More specifically a small radio transmitter working on the unusual wave length of say 100 meters is placed at the concert hall and sends out the concert. The average broadcast listener will not be able to receive this. But the broadcasting station will pick up this concert on an excellent receiver, amplify it in the control room amplifiers, and send it out again at full power at the usual wave of say 400 meters. This latter wave length will be readily received by the listeners. The radio relay method, which may be used more in the future for certain types of events, simply replaces the wire line from the concert hall to the studio by a radio telephone connection.

In this modern aspect, broadcasting not only flings out entertainment but also literally draws it in. From all points it takes the best and most entertaining material, draws it to the station by wire line transfer or radio relay, and then sends it out powerfully to an expectant audience. The outside event supervisors are literally musical "reporters" who cary their "news" to the station where it is published widespread for the benefit of the listeners.

What Does Radio Do for the Farmer?

In an address before a meeting of the leading agriculturists of the West, David Sarnoff catalogues the advantages of radio for the farmer as follows:

1. To relieve the farmer and his family from the sense of isolation which is perhaps the harshest handicap of agricultural life.
2. To broaden their social, spiritual and religious life.
3. To cope with class and sectional differences and develop greater national unity as between the farmer and other elements of our citizenship.
4. To make possible a system of agricultural colleges which will be open to all the 30,000,000 Americans who live on farms.
5. To aid in keeping the boys and girls on the farm thus preserving for agricultural developments the energies of the thousands of ambitious young men and women who are drawn away each year to urban pursuits.
6. Radio can be employed to furnish accurate time signals and weather reports to the farmer and townsman. It can broadcast warning of approaching storms and flood warnings received through radio, will be of priceless value to the farmer.
7. Radio can furnish accurate news of prices and trade conditions of farm products at all principal markets within the hour and make it available to every farm home.
8. Radio, in my judgment, is destined to become one of the most effective elements in the business equipment of the farm, comparable perhaps to the great utility of the automobile.

Nix On Sunday Dancing

It is probably not generally known that as the laws of Michigan now stand it is optional with township boards to close up all Sunday places of amusement, especially the dance halls. Over in Jackson county the several churches appealed to the Sheriff and he in turn placed the matter in the hands of the township board of Columbia township. Brooklyn and Clark Lake churches got up petitions and presented them hence the kibosh on dancing at Clark Lake on the Sabbath day. We understand authorities near Hague Park have practically done the same thing so that the resort season at these places will have to be rather mediocre at least on Sunday. It is not understood by us just why this action was taken unless the resorters carried their jollifications altogether too far and made public nuisances of themselves. We supposed that summer resorts were for resorters only and not for church people, however, no doubt a large number of young people may be benefitted by this movement. We hope so.

Most of the citizens of this place were shocked to note that Friday morning's Jackson News was the last issue of that clean and decent paper. According to what the News says the venture has not been a paying one, and probably considerable opposition has been put up against the respectable policies of the News. As we understand it the News has stood for clean politics and temperance in Jackson and a certain other sheet has stood diametrically opposed, hence it is not unlikely a lot of knocking has been indulged in. In a city of the stripe of Jackson we are not surprised that a decent paper finds it finances curtailed and its aims ridiculed There is something wrong with Jackson's morals you bet—for a city of Jackson's population which cannot support two daily papers must be poor indeed.

Foreign Representatives At Agronomist's Meeting

A representative from Australia, one from Germany, and 16 others from 16 states of the Union attended the joint meeting of American Society of Agronomists and American Society of Plant Pathologists held at M. S. C. July 9 and 10.

The scientists among other specimens of farm crops work were shown the new strain of clover developed at the college by the late Prof. Frank A. Sprague, plant breeder. The clover is two weeks later in development than other strains. Survey of soils and farm crops work, watching marl digging and soil testing apparatus at work picnics, swims, and fish fries were all a part of the summer meeting.

KING OF THE RODEOS

(Copyright by R. H. Doubleday.)

Tex Austin, a name that is known in every locality in the country where horses are bred or cattle raised. Such is the man who will draw on his years of experience to manage the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo to be held for nine days, beginning August 15.

"King of the Rodeo" is the title Austin has won. Born in the great state for which he was named, he was raised in the atmosphere of the range. He participated in the thrilling deeds of the famous contests of the Far West and then became a ranchman himself. Wherever the roundups have been staged, Austin's name has become synonymous with the cowboy sport. In the effort to perpetuate the spirit of the West, he managed and directed numberless rodeos in the West, also giving the East its first thrills from cowboy contests. Then, spreading the fame of Uncle Sam further, he put on the great international rodeo at Wembley, England, under the auspices of the British government.

Motion Pictures And The 'Teen Age

Volumes have been written about the teen age, but many of the problems of teen age young people have been created or solved by conditions surrounding their lives, by things they have heard, books they have read, and pictures they have seen long before they reached their teens. The young person who does not enter the teens with well defined ideals readily becomes the victim of every passing temptation dare or fancy. The teens then are not nearly so important as the years of preparation that have led up to them. The child who enters the teens with definite ideals of life, well developed self control and a reasonable amount of good judgment for those tender years, is comparatively safe in the face of any ordinary temptation. The motion picture mey be a great asset in the preparation for these years, but one can hardly imagine a greater menace than the average picture today.

HERO WORSHIP

There comes first to the child perhaps the age of hero worship. Not long ago a mother told me how her daughter and another little girl both ten years of age, had written in their diaries a pledge that they would not marry any man unless his ideals were those of the "Little Captain" in a beautiful story they had read. Imagine a child allowed to attend the movies once a week for more than five years upward, and what, may we ask, will be the character requirements of her or his hero or heroine? Mad passion and reckless self control would seem to be the answer one might reasonably expect. What would be the result of such ideas of life? Our newspapers and law courts are full of the results. A study just made by the New York state Prison Commission shows that a large percentage of boys and girls in reformatories and prisons have practically no moral training and many are hardened criminals before 20 years of age. The child most often found at movies usually has the least home training. Imagine the moral effect of attending a motion picture theater once a week from five years upward and seeing fifty two pictures a year of the average type. This is equivalent to reading fifty two novels. No young child could do that; No child or young person should do that, if they could. Such constant excitation of the nervous system tends to over develop the emotions and overthrow the judgment. All the intense emotional scenes depicted in a book are thrown upon the screen and pass before the child's mind in one to two hours. Recently I saw a picture where the hero was a thief, a murderer and an attempted suicide, and because he attempted suicide, he was reconciled to his bride and "they lived happily ever after." What a wild idea of life to put into the mind of a young person during the impressionable and emotional years! In another picture, the heroine is a woman who leaves her beautiful home and loyal husband in search of romance, After dipping into the world's most revolting filth, presented in a glamour of wealth, gowns and jewels, she returns to her loving husband and beautiful home; and marvel of marvels, while her husband's hair has turned grey in longing for her, she is as young and beautiful as when she started on her career of crime. These are but illustrations which might be multiplied by the hundreds. The question is, how long will we permit the motion picture industry to present moral lepers as heroes and heroines to our children and youth?

LOVE OF THE BEAUTIFUL

There is in the heart of every normal girl a desire to be attractive and a love of the beautiful. Recently I glanced over the story of a girl, who would not tolerate the slightest flaw in the clothing which she wore. It must be perfect, but her character was an ugly jagged garment. What a mistaken sense of values and yet how many pictures today overemphasize beautiful clothes and the physical appeal that a girl makes and underemphasize or utterly disregard the appeal of a beautiful character. It is little wonder that many girls are playing the vamp and dressing in the most extreme style since their heroine of the screen by doing these things is preferred by good men and bad men alike. The good girl, if one is really presented, sits alone in the corner and never gets a husband, unless the vamp or flapper refuses to take him. The girl who gets her training in the school of the movies, cannot be expected to understand the sacredness of her person, the sacredness of life, or the sacredness of a kiss or a caress. For these things are all made common and cheap in screen presentation. Very few pictures present the appeal of a noble character or a lovely personality They are therefore paving the road to the divorce court and the broken home. The man who marries a girl or a woman simply because of her physical attractiveness, will almost certainly grow tired of her when her hair turns grey, the wrinkles appear, the figure loses its charm, and the step loses the elasticity of youth. On the other hand the man who marries the girl for what she is in intellect and character, if she keeps in touch with the best in literature, art and music, and especially if she keeps in touch with the Word of God, finds more to admire in her, when her hair is grey and the wrinkles appear, than he found in the freshness and beauty of youth.

IDEALS

Many of the adults of this practical age look lightly upon high and holy ideals as relics of past grandeur unsuited to our modern life, Not so with our young people. Youth has always been hungry for ideals. Youth is the age of ideals. Those who in middle life and old age cling to the highest ideals, are those who have carried through the years the glory of youth. Recently a girl speaking of one of America's greatest women and most popular workers among young people, said "her hair is white, but her heart and her ideals are those of a girl." That woman has drank of the fountain of eternal youth.

Our teen age young folks today, in spite of all that is written and said to the contrary, and in spite of the lax standards of many of them, are none the less hungry for ideals. This I know because I speak to between sixty and seventy thousand of them in our High Schools a year. They do not want weak, insipid, goody goody ideas of life; they want ideals strong, clear cut, challenging, and because with the teen years come the thoughts of courtship, love, marriage and home life, they want ideals that deal with these vital relations of life.

We turn to much of modern fiction and most motion pictures, and find that never has any generation faced such a flood of suggestive indecent and immoral ideas and standards of life. In some cases Motion Picture Producers seem to co-operate with the publishers of indecent literature. In a subcription contest just closed, between a publisher of three indecent magazines and one of the leading motion picture producers, the first and second prizes were a guaranteed chance to appear in the movies at $150 per week and all expenses for eight weeks; the third, fourth and fifth were a guaranteed chance to try out, at $100 per week for eight weeks if successful. In the contest literature I read the magazine which I purchased in my investigation of this case was "a friend of the girl who toils." "Facts stories told by working girls who had actually lived romantic lives and accompanied by photographs of many of the confessors" the advertisement reads. What are these stories? Tales of the underworld with a glow of love and romance. Is it not strange that we can sit idly by while forces so deadly are seeking to profiteer by perverting the normal craving of excitement, adventure and romance.

THRILLS

One sometimes wonders if the chief end of existence in this generation is thrills. What is a thrill? The result of an intense appeal to the emotions. The whole range of emotions are included, from those which are awakened by that which is ugly and revolting to those which are awakened by that which is pure noble and awe inspiring. The world lies before us. Where will we find our thrills? Will it be in the dumping ground of moral garbage, or shall we go to the mountain peak to see the sunrise?

The tragedy of the bad picture is, it makes evil inviting until the mind which has lived in the atmosphere of rusty cans and garbage loses the soul thrill that comes from real badness. The power of the good picture is its ability to lead us for our thrills to the mountain peaks of purity, nobility and self control. "By their fruits ye shall know them"

Attends Convention Murphy Products Company

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Caswell of North Adams have just returned from a very pleasant trip to Burlington, Wis., where they attended the annual sales convention of the Murphy Products Company, manufacturers of Mineral Feeds.

The program was nicely balanced with business and pleasure including an excursion around Lake Geneva, a sumptious banquet at Browns Lake with the famous Douglas Malloch, humorous philosopher-poet as the speaker of the evening. An automobile tour to Milwaukee and through its parks was arranged for the wives which was thoroughlg enjoyed.

James H. Murphy, President of the Company and famous for the work he has done in popularizing mineral feeding described the remarkable growth of the company, praised the splendid efforts of his salesmen and gave many new and valuable facts on mineral feeding.

Professor Oscar Erf of Ohio State University and a nation wide authority on mineral feeding addressed the several hundred delegates and their wives on the absolute necessity of mineral feeding where profitable milk production is secured.

According to Mr. Caswell the Murphy Products Co., is one of the largest, possibly the biggest manufacturers of mineral feeds having over 1000 Veterinarians and farmer salesmen and he is looking forward to the next annual convention.

GOOD THINGS FOR ALL

Scrapple.—Clean a pig's head and boil it until the meat falls from the bones, cool and chop the meat, then reheat in the liquor in which it was cooked. Remove the fat and add corn meal to the consistency of mush. Cook slowly for a half hour at least, season with salt, pepper and a little sage, pour into molds and when cold slice thin and fry in a little hot fat.

Salisbury Oyster Salad.—Take two quarts of very cold oysters, two bunches of celery, eight hard-cooked eggs, two teaspoonfuls of salt, the same of mustard, six tablespoonfuls of melted butter, four teaspoonfuls of sugar, one cupful of lemon juice and a teaspoonful of pepper. Cut the celery into small pieces, add the yolks of the eggs, which have been rubbed to a fine powder; then add the seasonings and sugar and butter. Into this mixture pour the lemon juice very slowly, whipping the mixture well during the process. Sprinkle the oysters with a little salt and arrange the salad as follows: Place a layer of celery first, then a layer of oysters, alternating until all the oysters are used. Pour over the dressing and set the salad in a cool place. Garnish with the whites of the eggs cut into rings, with the white tips of celery.

Graham Muffins.—Take four cupfuls of graham flour, one tablespoonful of brown sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one egg well-beaten and two cupfuls of milk. Sift the dry ingredients, add the beaten egg and mix all well with the milk. Fill well-buttered gem pans two thirds full and bake in a hot oven twenty minutes.

Potato Salad.—Dice six cold boiled potatoes, one onion, four slices of bacon fried crisp. To the bacon fat in the pan add one-half cupful of mild vinegar and a tablespoonful of sugar, salt, pepper and cayenne to taste. Pour over the potato and onion and serve hot or cold.

King Tommy

By GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM

Copyright by Bobbs-Merrill Co.—W. N. U. Service

THE PRINCESS

SYNOPSIS. — In London the teller of the story of the adventures of "King Tommy" and known hereafter as "Uncle Bill," is informed by Lord Norheys, son of an old friend, that Lord Troyte, head of the British foreign office, Norheys' uncle, has a scheme to make him (Norheys) king of Lystria, in central Europe, through marriage to Calypso, daughter of King Wladislaws, deposed monarch of that country. A financier, Procopius Cable, knows there is oil in profusion in Lystria, and with an English king on the throne the output could be secured for England. Norheys, in love with a stage dancer, Viola Temple, is not enthusiastic over the proposition. The patriarch, Menelaus, highest ecclesiastical dignitary in Lystria, is heartily in favor of the restoration of the monarchy, and Cable has generously financed the sentiment. Calypso is making a living dancing in the "Mascotte," Berlin cabaret. Norheys refuses to entertain the idea of giving up Viola Temple, to whom he is secretly engaged. "Uncle Bill's" sister Emily urges him to secure a passport from Lord Troyte for a certain Janet Church, strong-minded female who wants to visit Lystria in the interests of a society for world peace. Janet Church leaves for Berlin. "Uncle Bill" is again appealed to by his sister to find a certain curate (name not given) who has left his parish in Ireland for a visit to Berlin, and cannot be found. Lord Norheys and Viola Temple disappear from London. Procopius Cable receives information that Norheys, with the princess, has left there on his way to Lystria, but Norheys appears with the former Viola Temple, now his wife. The question is, "Who is the man who has gone to Lystria with the Princess Calypso?" Casimir introduces himself, and Janet Church, vainly seeking from the British consulate a passport to Lystria, becomes acquainted with the two men in the Adlon hotel. Tommy mistakes Casimir for a hotel thief and refuses him admission to his room. Casimir insists on Tommy dining at the Mascotte. Tommy again meets Janet in a telephone booth, where he had gone in an attempt to escape from Casimir. Janet Church, thinking Casimir can be instrumental in securing her passport, urges Tommy to introduce her. He finally agrees, she to pose as his aunt. Tommy and Janet visit the Mascotte that evening.

A small dapper man in evening clothes came up to him and bowed. Tommy saw that thin gray hair was carefully brushed across a bald patch on top of his head. He was by no means a young man. He had small twinkling eyes and a rounded paunch. But he bore himself with a certain dignity. Even when he was bowing low there was no sign of servility in his manner. This was the head waiter of the Mascotte and he did Tommy high honor by granting him this personal reception.

"Your lordship's table is reserved, one of our very best tables."

He spoke with an excellent English accent. He waved his hand in the direction in which he wanted Tommy to go and then walked in front of him. There was no mistake about the dignity of the man's bearing. It was almost kingly, just such a bearing and manner as suited the head waiter of the Mascotte.

Following the man's lead, Tommy passed between two lines of inferior waiters, all bowing low. From tables to the right and left revelers looked up and watched him pass. They whispered to each other, inquiring who it could be who was received so impressively by the head waiter and his staff. Tommy came at last to a small table set a little apart. The head waiter pulled back a large gilt chair. Tommy noticed a small card on a silver stand in the middle of the table. It bore his name, Norreys; but not the Rev. T. A. Norreys. He was described on the card as the Markgraf von Norreys. It seemed to Tommy well worth while to be a Markgraf—whatever a markgraf was—if the title secured so much consideration and respect. Tommy felt rather glad that Count Casimir had made his mistake.

The head waiter murmured confidentially in his ear:

"If your lordship will allow me to order the dinner and choose the wine—I assure you that I thoroughly understand wine."

His English was perfect, far better than Count Casimir's and he spoke it with the intonation and accent of a gentleman. Tommy felt sure that he might be trusted to order the very best food and wine obtainable in the Mascotte. But he had an uncomfortable feeling that the bill for the entertainment might be startling. His pockets were full of marks, stuffed with them. But it might very well take a trunk full of marks to pay for the dinner which the aristocratic head waiter would order. Tommy hesitated and made a grab at the menu, intending to make sure of the worst that could befall him. The head waiter, a man of quick apprehension, guessed his thoughts. Bending low he whispered into Tommy's ear:

"I need scarcely say that your lordship will be at no expense, none whatever."

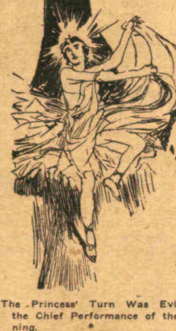
Then he turned and gave a series of orders in German to a subordinate who stood near.

Tommy leaned back in his gilt chair and looked round. He saw at once that he had been given one of the very best tables in the room. It stood at the edge of a great square carpet which covered the center of the floor. On the carpet itself there were no tables. But diners at tables of various sizes sat round it in parties of two or four or six. Behind the tables which stood on the edge of the carpet were others. Behind these still more and these were set on a sort of platform a step above the floor of the room. Farther back among pillars and under archways in what Tommy thought of as broad side aisles, were other places for still more diners.

Gazing round curiously Tommy caught sight of a woman standing up at one of the farthest tables. She was waving her hand and signaling to him. At a second glance he recognized her—Janet Church. In a severe black dress, the only evening gown she took with her when traveling, she looked much out of place in the Mascotte. Having attracted Tommy's attention, she began to cross the room toward him, evidently with the intention of sitting down at his table. But this was not allowed. The head waiter caught sight of her and gave an order to one of his men. Janet Church was stopped, turned round and conducted to the obscure and distant table which she had left.

It would interest me, though perhaps no one else, to know what Tommy had to eat and drink that night. Unfortunately, he can give me no account at all of his meal and does not know the name of the champagne he drank.

Shortly after eleven o'clock Tommy discovered what the stretch of carpet in the middle of the room was for. The band, which had been playing some of the music of Tosca suddenly struck up a dance-tune. Two girls appeared from a curtained recess at the far end of the room, ran down among the tables, pirouetted in the middle of the carpet, and began to dance.



The Princess' Turn Was Evidently the Chief Performance of the Evening.

Tommy had seen dancing before, on the stage at the Gayety theater in Dublin at the time of the Christmas pantomime. But this was a very different thing. There he viewed the dancers from a distance, with an orchestra and a row of footlights between him and them. They were remote creatures, unreal, scarcely flesh and blood. Here they came close to him, so close that the whirling of their skirts as they passed him fanned the air against his face. He could smell the scent from their clothes and see the heaving of their throats as they caught their breath. And the music was far more exciting than any he had ever heard.

The waiter who attended him filled his glass with champagne. Tommy sipped it as he watched the dancers. Others took the places of the first two, dancing wildly, sometimes dancing well. The music grew louder. The whole scene began to grow dim before Tommy's eyes, as a man might watch the figures in a dream.

He was awakened to the reality of his surroundings by the sound of Casimir's voice in his ear. The count had slipped over quietly from some other part of the room and had sat down at Tommy's table.

"Please," he said. "the Princess Calypso now."

Tommy was scarcely surprised at the announcement. A princess, a queen, an empress, any kind of exalted lady, except perhaps one of Fra Angelico's angels, might have danced before him there on the Persian carpet without surprising him very much.

The princess' turn was evidently the chief performance of the evening. Conversation ceased. Men sat down their glasses and leaned forward in their chairs. The music of the band sank to a soft rhythmical throbbing. A drum muttered softly. A girl in a dress shining with sequins stepped daintily down among the tables, stood in the middle of the carpet and curtsied low to Tommy.

He could have sworn that it was to him alone that she curtsied, that she took no notice of any one else in the room. He also had an unpleasant impression that she disliked, or perhaps despised him, and only curtsied to him because she was forced to do it.

The managers of the Mascotte, having secured the services of a real princess, made the most of her, and gave her every chance of making the most of herself. The higher lights were extinguished all over the room. Only the small shaded lamps on the diners' tables still burned. A bright beam from some hidden lamp fell on the princess and followed her wherever she moved. The twitching of the violin strings grew faster. The players drew their bows across the strings and the music came loud and tempestuous. The girl on the carpet with the light on her looked younger, fresher, more beautiful than any of the others who had danced before her.

Unfortunately she could not dance. Her performance would scarcely have won applause in a second-rate theater. Her steps and attitudes were graceful enough but were easy of accomplishment. There was no kind of spirit or any delight in her dancing. Even Tommy, who knew nothing about the art, realized that this girl was greatly the inferior of those who had gone before her. Her dancing meant nothing, conveyed nothing except a feeling that she disliked doing it and despised the people she was doing it for. It seemed to Tommy that she was dancing specially for him and that she disliked and despised him more than she did the others.

The music rose to a climax of sound. The dance came suddenly to an end. The lights blazed out again. The girl sank to the ground in a low curtsey with her skirts spread out round her, right in front of Tommy's table, within a couple of feet from him. There was a burst of applause. Men stood up and shouted. It was not the dancing they approved. Not a Jewess among them, not a slant-eyed Russian lady, not a profiteer, or even an American but knew perfectly well that the girl could not dance. Their applause was for themselves, not for her. It was the new rich proclaiming their triumph over the old aristocracy, over royalty itself. Risen from the slime of the war period, they acclaimed themselves masters of the old order which was there, like Samson among the Philistines, to make sport for them.

The band blared into a noisy march. The girl remained crouched at Tommy's feet, flushed and panting, the fingers of her right hand twitching at the bodice of her dress. Suddenly she rose. With a quick nod and a little motion of her hand she flicked a note across to Tommy. It fell on the plate in front of him. The girl, without glancing at him again, looking neither to the right nor to the left, walked through the applauding people and disappeared.

Snake Does Not "Sting"

The stinging snake is a myth. Although thousands of people apparently believe there is such a thing as a stinging snake, and many of them insist that they have seen such snakes, no competent scientist or observer has ever had the privilege of seeing one. Rewards for stinging snakes are occasionally offered, but no such snakes are ever produced. The nearest approach to the supposed stinging snake is the "Farancia abacura," a small, harmless snake with a needle-like spine on its tail. In different parts of the South this snake, along with kindred species, is known variously as the hoop snake, the rainbow snake, the mud snake and the stinging snake. But the notion that these snakes sting with their tails is all poppycock.—Exchange.

Women Ruled in Days of Our Cave Ancestors

Old-fashioned ideas as to man's supremacy in the days when the earth was young have had a rude jolt, according to an eminent statement of ancient manners and customs. It is now declared that woman, in the days of our cave-dwelling ancestors, was regarded as of the more important sex. Men held a secondary position, tolerated for the sake of the food and skins provided. Women ruled, and were the inventors of the earliest arts and sciences. It was the woman's ingenuity which devised snares for animals and made plans for storing food against times of scarcity. Women taught ways of making clothing from skins of animals and by the efforts of their brains improved the lot of all the human race. Woman's cunning and wit were the outcome of her lack of physical strength, which obliged her to resort to strategy rather than force. On the whole, the prehistoric woman apparently held the same position and ruled man in the same manner that she does today. Man possibly thought he was boss, but so long as he didn't know any better, what difference did it make?

Miracles of St. Leonard

If there were such a personage, St. Leonard would certainly have been the patron saint of prisoners. He was originally a French nobleman at the court of Clovis I, and became a monk and founded a monastery which, after his death, about 599, was known as St. Leonard le Noblat. He was famed for his charity toward prisoners, and is reputed to have worked many miracles on their behalf. These miracles in releasing unhappy captives continued after his death, according to tradition, which was very convenient, as his festival happened to be the first day of the Michaelmas term, when writs were made returnable.—Family Herald.

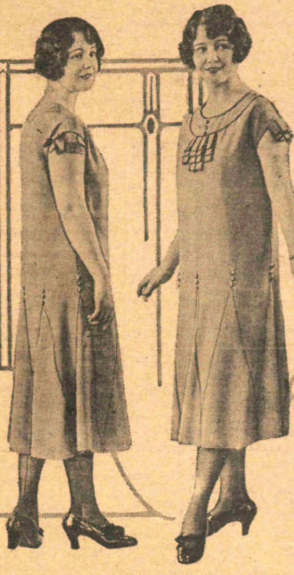
STRAIGHT LINES CAPITULATE; THE LAST HATS OF SUMMER

With much unanimity master designers decided to attack the straightline silhouette this spring—going on the theory that we can have too much of even a very good thing. Although the attack comes from all quarters it was not a marked success in the ranks of street and sports clothes. So far from disappearing, the straightline vogue has not even grown less—not so that you can notice it, when throngs on the street, or promenades on athletic fields, pass in review.

But among gay and light-minded afternoon frocks, there was much wavering—the attack has proved successful. In more or less informal afternoon [illegible]s, women are inclined to run after strange gods and to encourage new ideas. The flared skirt, tiered dresses and tunic dresses all found themselves made welcome and all have appeared in many graceful versions. Even higher waistlines were occasionally entertained and the long sleeve succeeded in establishing a place for itself. Among these innovations, the most successful is the flared skirt. By fair means it has made itself a success that is going to last.



Introducing the Flared Skirt.

One of the most charming ways of introducing a flare in the straightline dress appears in the model shown here, where long godets join forces to overcome the severity of a plain crepe de chine frock. There is no sacrifice of the much-admired simplicity that fashion sponsors and there are also ingenious and original details of finish sure to win favor for this frock. They appear in groups of small crepe covered buttons posed at the point of each godet, in graduated loops made of folds of the crepe, used for finishing neck and short sleeves and in the narrow yoke.

Short, plaited skirts, set on to long bodices, circular flounces and tiers, and godets plaited at the top but loose at the bottom, are other means of insinuating fullness into afternoon and evening frocks.

Of certain kinds of hats it is not necessary to say anything—there are so many of them—they speak for themselves. The little felt hat, in pastel colors and white, for instance, is everywhere. It has been reinforced by similar hats of white kid and combinations of white and black in kid. Following immediately upon the heels of the kid hat came the hat of black patent leather, combined with white kid, in facings and decorations.

In dressier hats the wide-brimmed pastel-colored, hair-braid shapes have outdistanced all rivals for midsummer. To the lighter shades fashion has added rich purples in pansy and fuchsia tones. Many of these hair braids are flower trimmed, with blossoms in shades of the same color as the hats. Roses, with stems long and large chrysanthemums and water lilies are in great demand for them, but there are many models trimmed with silk or velvet, with printed chiffon or applique figures of velvet.

Leaving these leading items out because every one is familiar with them the group of hats pictured includes new developments of established styles—the last of the summer hats in which designers embody the season's most successful ideas. At the top of the group a hat of hair and straw braid stitched row on row reveals a crown trim of ribbon and flowers and a facing of light crepe. Below it a hair braid with drooping brim offers lines of gold thread run in the crown by way of variation, and trailing stems as well as roses, posed on the crown. Below it a small shape of straw braid is trimmed with a ribbon collar and veiled with printed chiffon. A novel and handsome fabric hat covered by rows of narrow braid is shown with a series of upward-turning points that form the brim and a flat rosette of small flowers and ribbon at the front. Stems play an important part in the daring trimming on the last hat in the group. If it were not for the cluster of roses at one side they might be taken for a small family of tiny snakes wriggling over the crown and brim.

Old Chinese Relic Did Its Full Duty

One of the first official acts of Gen. Chang Tsung-chang on assuming his new post as military governor of Shantung was the ordering of prayers for rain in that parched province. As an inaugural to the supplications he ordered the firing of 120 guns on the Hungshan, a hill just outside Tsinanfu, the capital. After a week had elapsed with no sign of a shower General Chang sent emissaries to Hantanhsien, Chihli province, to borrow the famous Iron Tablet—the Tieh Pei—which reposes in the temple there and is reverenced as an infallible protector of the crops in that district. The tablet, which is inscribed with ancient writings, was taken out of the temple and paraded with much ceremony last year when Chihli province was suffering from drought. Immediately thereafter came a spell of rain that flooded 10,000 square miles of farm land and cost several thousand lives. All of which redounded to the reputation of the relic.

Old "Mammy" Honored

An exclusive white cemetery in Macon, Ga., gave up its distinction the other day in order to do honor to an antebellum negress, Anna Jordan, who recently died. A negro preacher conducted the service in the house of Mrs. R. H. Smith, in whose family she had been "mammy" for 38 years. Burial was in the Smith family plot after every honor possible had been paid by members of the family in which she had served so long.

Butterflies Go to Iceland

C. B. Williams, chief entomologist of the Egyptian ministry of agriculture, has found that the "painted lady" butterfly has migrated from Africa to Iceland on a number of occasions. The distance is over 4,000 miles and it is usually covered in three to four months. The butterflies show up in Iceland in July, leaving Africa and Asia Minor in April. Only the hardiest among the flyers succeed in making the immigration, however.

Darrow and Bryan are two of America's greatest thinkers and that is one reason why it seems strange to see them lined up against one another down in Dayton, Tennessee. Besides, these two men agree on so many things that their hostility seems stranger still Bryan proved his friendship for peace by resigning from the President's cabinet in 1915 while Darrow also proved his friendship for peace in his interesting debate with Arthur Lewis. Bryan is a champion of the working man and Darrow is known throughout the nation as a champion of labor and friend of freedom of speech. Bryan is an enemy of the Big Profiteers who prey upon the American public and Darrow is also after the profiteers as is shown by his book "Crime and criminals." Bryan is a foe of child labor and so is Darrow. Bryan proposes a chain of daily papers for this country which will tell the truth regardless of party creed or race and Darrow thinks likewise. In politics, Bryan calls himself a Democrat but his ideas are in harmony with those of the Christian Socialists while Darrow's ideas are similar to those of the Darwinian Socialists. But when it comes to the subject of evolution Bryan and Darrow are as far apart as the east is from the west.

Fuller Family Reunion

The fifty-fourth annual Reunion of the Fuller family was held Thursday, July 2, 1925, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Corey in Allen, Hillsdale county.

At an early hour guests began to arrive from north, south, east and west, and when the dinner hour arrived forty-four sat down to the tables set on the lawn, already groaning under their weight of good things.

After dinner a short business session was held and the following officers elected for another year: President, E. J. Fuller of Hillsdale; vice president, Clarence Jennings, North Adams; secretary, Jessie Fuller, Battle Creek.

Since our last reunion the grim reaper has entered our ranks and taken five of our loved ones from us whom we greatly miss.

With sorrow in our hearts for our dear departed, joy came to comfort us in the advent of six little lives with all their sunshine to brighten our pathway.

Upon invitation the company voted to meet with Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Fuller in Hillsdale, the last Thursday in June, 1926.

Ice cream and cake were served, and the guests departed for their homes. Relatives were present from Hillsdale, North Adams, Addison, Jackson, Battle Creek and Lusk, Wyoming. X

Numerous inquiries are going the rounds as to the character of the three candidates who are running for nomination at the primaries July 21st to replace Arthur B. Williams at Washington, D. C. We are not familiar with any of them as we don't know them. We understand McArthur is supported by the K. K. K., Farrell is recommended by the W. C. T. U. and Hooper is running on his own recognizance as an all-round good citizen who wants to enforce the Volstead law. Any of the three make strong temperance claims, and Hooper comes to us with the statement from Dr. Samuel Dickie, President Emeritus of Albion College, as follows: "I have heard many fine things of him and I believe he is a man who would worthily represent us in Congress. Mr. Hooper has assured me he stands right on the question of keeping the Volstead Law.—Advertisement.

Annual School Meeting

The annual school meeting of District No. 3, Adams. was held on Monday evening with a small attendance. Nothing of extra importance was before the meeting. Tellers appointed were Mrs Josephine Jones and Mrs. Addie Taylor, and the usual procedure of balloting resulted in the election of Harold C. Young to succeed himself for three years. The board now consists of Jay North, president; H. C. Young secretary; Bert Taylor director; and Dr. McFarland trustee. The question of raising funds for the ensuing year was taken up and $6,000 was voted for running expenses with a small item for repairs needed this year

Teachers for the ensuing year with one exception, have been engaged as follows: Supt., R. C. Young; principal, T. N. Lamb; English, Rev. Hunt; intermediate Mrs. R. C. Young; primary, Mrs. Etta Pray; The music department is as yet uncared for. and it is not known yet whether it will be maintained.

On account of the union Sunday school picnic at Devils Lake July 24, the S. P. I. class party will be held one week later, July 31 at Wilson's Lake. Everyone is urged to attend and bring their family. Pot-luck dinner will be followed by sports and games for all.

Dr. Samuel Dickie, President Emeritus of Albion college, for more than a third of a century a national leader in prohibition and other reforms, specifically recommending Mr. Hooper's stand on the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act., said to an Albion audience recently:

"I have no hesitancy whatever in saying that Mr. Hooper is a dependable, capable and honorable gentleman who will honorably represent us if we succeed in sending him to congress. . . . I am going to support Mr. Hooper, for I believe he is is the man to send down to Washington because he will stand right on these great questions."

Annual Sunday School Picnic

On Friday, July 24, one week from to-day, occurs the annual interdenominational Sunday school picnic of the Methodist, Baptist and Congregational societies of this village at Manitou Beach Devils Lake, and you can't afford to miss it. There is always something doing at this point and facilities for boating, bathing and fishing are excellent. Since we last met there a splendid toboggan slide has been erected which adds 75 per cent to the worth whileness of the place. It is only a step by automobile, so pack up the lunch basket and toddle along down to the lake. Bring the little folks and they will be safe. Plenty of boats.

The Birthday Club

Mrs. Jay Knowles pleasantly entertained the birthday club at her home on Tuesday. An interesting feature of the occasion was a shower for Miss Vera Crapser who received many useful gifts Another highly interesting feature was a mock wedding in costume. The wedding march was played by Miss Lillian Mallory of Grand Rapids and the wedding ceremony was excellently performed by Mrs. Vern Brown. The wedding party consisted of the following: Bride, Donna Lynch; bridegroom, Rena Knowles; bridesmaid, Marie Gross; best man, Hetty Shepard; flower and ring bearer, Majorgia Caldwell; mother of the bride, Mrs. Harve Shepard; father of the bride, Mrs. Frank Holcomb; grand-mother, Mrs. Alfred Height; aunts, Mrs. C. W. Bleech and Mrs. B. I. Lynch.

A bountiful dinner was served at noon and refreshments were served on the lawn following the wedding ceremony.

The regular cottage prayer meeting will be held next Tuesday evening, July 21, at the home of Wyman Stott on East Main St. Invitation is to all.

We note with pleasure that our Secretary of State, Charles DeLand is advocating the changing of the automobile laws in Michigan. He thinks a driver should be granted a license for the life of his car, and not be compelled to renew each year. This would prevent the trouble both to state and owner. Then Mr. DeLand advocates a gas tax of 3c per gallon be placed on gas and the proceeds he believes would take care of the road program to the extent of $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 for construction each year, and the expensive process of collecting the license fees would be done away with Just as we always claimed—the cost of collection eats up too large a slice of the tax and should be cut out.

An Original Poem

Our former townsman, Henry J. Sawin of Grand Rapids has entered a literary career. Following is one of his compositions which hits the nail squarely on the head:

HELP!! HELP!!

O brother censor, listen to my tale of woe
Dear hubby's gone to yonder picture show

The wolf is growling at the door
The carpet gone from off the floor

The cupboard's empty—not a crumb I know
While Daddy's at the measly pictur' show.

Dear brother listen, do I pray
And see if aught can save the day

Call Mrs. Pan from England's shores so green
And have her cast a bit of TNT on the screen

I've rubbed the washboard day and night
Of cash I've saved quite a sight

To find when I returned to count my dough
That Hubby'd copped it, and was at the show

The halls are silent, still and dumb;
The bar-room's empty—on the bum

And may we, who reason well (I trow)
Point to that awful movie pictur' show.

Why the Sheetrock way is the quickest way

QUICK construction is one of the important advantages you get in using Sheetrock, the fireproof wallboard.

For Sheetrock comes all ready to use. You simply nail the wide, ceiling-high sheets to the supports. The trim and decoration can follow without waiting for the walls to dry.

Besides being ready for immediate decoration, Sheetrock walls are proof against cold and damp, fire and sound. They are non-warping, non-buckling and permanent.

Harrison, appointed director of the War Finance corporation to succeed Frank W. Mondell.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Progress of the Anti-Evolution Trial—Civil War in China Is Renewed.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

YOU can't get away from the Tennessee evolution case, if you read the daily papers or listen in on the radio. Although Dayton is disappointed in the number of visitors attracted by the trial, there are swarms of reporters and news photographers there, all exceedingly busy. Considerable progress was made in the first week of the case. The defense made another attempt to stop the trial by asking Judge Rauiston to quash the indictment on the ground that the anti-evolution law is unconstitutional. In denying the motion the judge ruled that the law does not violate the right of free worship or free speech, and does not violate section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution which provides that no man shall be deprived of his life, liberty or property except by due process of law, and that all men shall enjoy equal rights under the law. On every point brought up by it the defense was overruled.

Though defeated in this matter, the motion to quash gave Clarence Darrow his first good chance for oratory and argument, and it also laid the ground for carrying the case on up to the Supreme court. The Chicago agnostic made a stirring speech in which he asserted that unless constitutional guarantees were upheld in this case, unless the anti-evolution law were killed, the liberties of church and press and school would be taken away. He described the theory of evolution as a wonderful conception of the processes of life in which was a God who did not stop when he made the first man out of dust, but works on forever and forever. He declared the fundamentalists were leading America back to the Sixteenth century of ignorance and bigotry and denounced Bryan as "the man responsible for this foolish, mischievous and wicked act."

There were many sharp exchanges between counsel, but during the first days Mr. Bryan generally kept his seat, biding his time. In another matter the defense met early defeat. Judge Raulston started in by having the day's proceedings opened with prayer. To this Darrow and Malone made formal objection, arguing that the case was one in which the state claimed there was a conflict between science and religion and that prayers might unduly influence the jury. The judge ruled against them, saying this was a matter wholly within the discretion of the court. Attorney Hays for the defense asked that other ministers than the fundamentalists of Dayton be selected to deliver the prayers, and on Wednesday the invocation was by Rev. Dr. Charles Francis Potter of New York, Universalist, who was expected to be a witness for the defense later on. The jury was sworn in and Attorney General Stewart briefly stated the case of the prosecution. Mr. Malone followed with a statement of the defense's case in the course of which he said:

"While the defense thinks there is a conflict between evolution and the Old Testament we believe there is no conflict between evolution and Christianity. There may be a conflict between evolution and the peculiar ideas of Christianity such as are held by Mr. Bryan, the evangelist leader of the prosecution; but we deny that the evangelical leader of the prosecution is an authorized spokesman for the Christians of the United States. The defense maintains that there is a clear distinction between God, the church, the Bible, Christianity, and Mr. Bryan.

"We shall prove our philosophy and principles from the lips of witnesses who are a part of the prosecution."

The court here sustained objections of the state to the mention of Bryan by name, whereupon Malone, calling that gentleman "the evangelical spokesman of the prosecution," quoted from an article written by Bryan 20 years ago on Jefferson's ideas of religious freedom. In this article Bryan said that religion does not need the support of government to overcome error and that any attempt to compel people to accept a religious doctrine by act of law does not make Christians, but hypocrites. Malone added: "We of the defense appeal from his (Bryan's) fundamentalist views of today to his philosophical views of yesterday, when he was a modernist, from our point of view."

Seven witnesses for the state were called to the stand, some of them being pupils of Scopes. They testified that Scopes taught the theory of evolution, and this being all the state desired to show, it rested its case. The defense introduced the first of its witnesses, Dr. Maynard M. Metcalf, former professor of zoology in Oberlin college, Ohio. Attorneys for the prosecution objected to the competency of scientific testimony in the case and, the jury being excluded, the judge had Doctor Metcalf answer the questions the defense desired to ask concerning the nature of the theory of evolution. He outlined the fundamental proofs of evolution, and concluded: "The series of proofs are so convincing that any informed man cannot doubt the probability of man's evolution."

Next day the attorneys began their arguments for and against the admission of expert testimony by scientists and others. William J. Bryan, Jr., opened for the prosecution.

Bryan senior followed his son with an impassioned plea for revealed religion, for the Bible's account of creation and for salvation. He lambasted the scientists, most of whom he said did not believe in God, and made scathing allusions to Darrow with particular reference to the Loeb-Leopold case.

Then came Dudley Field Malone with an eloquent presentation of the case for science and a demand for freedom to search for the truth. He had no words derogatory of the Bible or of religion, and he won fully as much applause as did Mr. Bryan.

CIVIL war has really broken out again in China, and this may prevent the calling of a conference to revise the treaties. Anyhow, France and Japan seem disposed to stand by Great Britain in her objection to any such revision at this time. President Coolidge's position, made public after a conference with Secretary Kellogg and reiterated by Minister MacMurray on his arrival in Peking, is that the foreign powers and China must scrupulously observe the Washington conference pacts and that China must take adequate measures for the protection of foreigners. The President also has more than intimated that it would be wise to hold soon an international conference to revise China's unequal treaties.

Although it was expected the civil war would first appear in the provinces of Chekiang and Kiangsu, where Chang Tso-lin was sending troops to combat the military governor, Sun Chuang-fang, it was in Szechuan province that hostilities broke out. Yang Sen, the government general, attacked rival commanders near Chungking.

Negotiations for the settlement of the Shanghai controversy arising from the riots and killing of students seem doomed to failure because the foreigners themselves are quarreling. Peking refuses to treat with Great Britain alone in the matter. The Chinese charge that the foreigners in Shanghai have attempted to set up an independent state which is not responsible to any foreign government. The Latin and Scandinavian settlements assert that the Shanghai settlement is responsible to the powers, who have the right to remove municipal officers, but the British, Americans and Japanese oppose this view. Municipal officials claim that neither the powers nor the Chinese have any right to interfere in the Shanghai settlement.

KING VICTOR EMMANUEL of Italy, according to an announcement by the secretary of the Fascist party, has signed a general amnesty order, effective August 6, which presumably will set free, among many others, the six Fascist leaders who are accused of the murder of Deputy Matteotti. This news aroused the opposition parties to such an extent that sensational measures were planned to influence the king not to include those men in the amnesty. A document was prepared for presentation to the king asserting that a Fascist terrorist organization similar to the Russian cheka exists in Italy with the approval of Premier Mussolini to get rid of the opposition leaders.

The London Telegraph says there is in existence an energetic international campaign to overthrow Mussolini and the Fascist regime and that "occult forces, from Wall street to Vienna and from Milan to Moscow, are working to this end." They are said to have adopted the method of "boring from within" and to be well supplied with funds.

DEFIANTLY refusing to resign at the demands of his political enemies, Foreign Minister Stresemann of Germany will stand or fall on the success of his security pact negotiations with Great Britain and France, and he has drafted his reply to the French note, though its contents have not been made public. It is said Stresemann thinks his plan will enable Germany to free itself from the Rapallo treaty and Russia and would go far toward preventing a war between the western powers and Russia fought on German soil.

IN A desperate attempt to break through the Taza-Fez line and capture the capital before the French and Spanish get their co-operative campaign working, Abd-el-Krim began an attack with all his forces along a 200-mile front. The Riffians passed the French blockhouse line and were fighting about 25 miles north of Fez and 20 miles north of Taza. Many more tribesmen hitherto friendly to the French or neutral have been induced to join the Riff chief. France is hurrying reinforcements and has called for volunteers. Premier Painleve has accepted the offer of a number of Americans, formerly of the Lafayette Escadrille and the Foreign Legion, to enter the Sultan's army for the Morocco war and to form an aerial unit. Among these Americans are Commander Parker of Montana, who in the war commanded the American seaplane defense along the Italian coasts; Maj. Granville Pollock and Col. Charles Kerwood of New York, Paul Rockwell of Atlanta, Ga., and Maj. William Rogers of Pittsburgh, Pa.

LAST week President Coolidge pretty nearly passed up all business for rest and diversion. With Mrs. Coolidge he sailed on the Mayflower to Quincy on the Boston south shore, where he inspected the Lexington, the navy's big new airplane carrier now nearing completion, and then motored to the two old colonial cottages where Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams were born. Tuesday the President gave a luncheon for Count Alexander Skrzynski, Polish minister of foreign affairs; Assistant Secretary of State J. Butler Wright; James C. White, special secretary to Senator Butler of Massachusetts, John Hays Hammond, and Melville E. Stone, counselor for the Associated Press.

Expect Leipzig Fair Will Set New Record

Leipzig, Germany.—The Leipzig fair to be held from August 30 to September 9 promises to surpass any previous Leipzig expedition.

It is expected the attendance will be nearly double that of the spring fair, at which there were more than 180,000 business men from all parts of the world, with 14,000 exhibitors from 18 countries.

One of the features of the coming fair will be the huge underground exhibition hall, generally considered a technical world's wonder. Another prominent feature will be the machinery hall, conceded to be the largest exhibition hall in Germany. It occupies an area of 21,000 square meters. The old house for electro-techniques has been materially enlarged by two wings, each two stories high.

In order to furnish the necessary space for the erection of a number of new exhibition buildings, the municipality of Leipzig has placed a further area of 130,000 square meters at the disposal of the administrators of the fair. This permits sufficient space for the construction of a special freight station.

The magnitude of the fair has made a division into two sections necessary, "the general sample exhbit" and "the technical and constructive exhibit." The latter will continue four days longer than the former and will be arranged in fifteen halls. The "sample exhibition" will be in eighty halls and special buildings.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Lansing—The state administrative board released $50,000 of the $270,000 appropriation for a horticultural building at the Michigan State college.

Flint—The Detroit United Railway, which operates the street railway system here, has made a tentative offer to sell the railway to the city. The offer was in the form of an advertisement in a local newspaper.

Muskegon — Promoters for a new bank at Muskegon Heights announced a state charter would be applied for and that $40,000 of capital stock already had been subscribed. Stanley Risk, one of the promoters, said the bank probably would be opened within two months.

Muskegon—Many citizens thronged the city commission chamber recently to protest against the sale and removal of Pigeon Hill, largest of the Lake Michigan sand dunes. The dune has been purchased by private interests with the intention of removing it for commercial purposes.

Lansing—Investigation of the recent daring escapes from the branch prison at Marquette, in which Eddie Weisman, Isadore Londe, Vance Hardy and Joe Deflorio shot their way over the walls, was coupled with a report in the state capital that Warden James P. Corgan shortly would offer his resignation.

Negaunee—Puzzled as to how to proceed with the case of Fred Ross, 15 years old, charged with the murder of Joseph La Plante, Thomas Clancey, prosecuting attorney of Marquette county, has telegraphed Attorney General Dougherty, asking for his interpretation of the state law, relating to minors charged with murder.

Jackson—When Edward E. Marshall, 28 years old, stepped through the gate at the prison where he had just completed a six months' sentence for passing a worthless check, he was placed under arrest by Sheriff R. V. Rogers, of Glasgow, Mont., on a charge of grand larceny. The sheriff and his prisoner have departed for Montana.

Lansing—Steps which may lead to the removal of all projecting signs, including expensive electrical displays, from the streets of Lansing were taken at a recent meeting of the Merchants' bureau here. It was voted to name a committee to visit all the merchants in an effort to obtain a "gentlemen's agreement" to remove the signs.

Monroe—The city fire department is not to make any more runs outside of the corporate limits of Monroe unless such trips are sanctioned by the mayor and fire chief, the city commission decided. This action was taken largely because it was feared that the apparatus might be damaged on its runs into the country and the city would be in danger in case of fire.

Holland—Holland's new state armory will be completed and ready for the local company of guardsmen by July 22. The building is two stories and contains a shooting range, basketball court, billiard room, veteran's room, two office rooms and two lounge rooms. Henry Geerds, commander of the local company, was instrumental in securing the building.

Owosso — Although three new school have been built here in the last three years, Owosso's school tax rate will be lower for 1924-25 than in 1821-22, the budget adopted by the city commission reveals. The rate will be $15.16 on each $1,000 of assessed valuation, against $17.39 in 1921-22. The budget totals $250,000, or $25,000 less than that of last year.

Lansing—Permission has been given a voting machine company to install three of its machines in city precincts for a test at the next election, it was announced at the city hall. One of the machines has been in the city hall for some months to allow citizens an opportunity to inspect it. If the machines prove satisfactory, it is expected they will be installed throughout the city.

Lansing—No charter hereafter will be granted by the State Department to any proposed new building and loan association which does not capitalize for $1,000,000 or has fewer than 15 members on its board of directors. This was one of the rules announced by Charles J. De Land, Secretary of State, before a meeting of building and loan representatives held in the Senate Chamber here.

Marshall—Interurban lines will not be discontinued in this locality if the M. E. R. is granted permission to operate busses paralleling its own lines. Instead, interurbans will carry freight and perhaps some passengers, while the busses will handle the burden of passenger travel between Jackson, Marshall, Battle Creek and Kalamazoo, according to a statement by J. J. Mahoney, superintendent of M. E. R.

Muskegon—Charles Hackley Lee, 35 years old, heir to the millions of Charles Hackley, pioneer lumberman, and Paul A. Peterson, garage owner, were killed by a runaway speed boat, shortly before the opening of the Theatrical Colony Yacht Club's annual regatta. Lee and Peterson with Carl Weslund and S. Bromley, were thrown from Lee's speed boat, Sneakey, while making a short turn. Rescuers kept back by the runaway speed boat which kept running for more than two hours in a small circle.

Ann Arbor—Arrangements whereby a debating team from the University of Michigan will be sent to England in May, 1926 to meet colleges of that country are being completed, it was learned here. While no definite statement would be made by members of the public speaking department, it is known that as soon as guarantees are posted by the English schools, the final arrangements will be made. A special team will be selected from among the members of Delta Sigma Rho, National Honor Forensic Fraternity, according to Prof. Trueblood.

Monroe—Out of 17,740 cattle tested in 11 townships in Monroe county, 957 were afflicted with tubercular trouble, according to reports received here by C. L. Burton, Monroe county agent. The test was authorized by the board of supervisors.

Port Huron—Henry Ford has begun a new crusade—a crusade to revive the courtly dances of 1850. Ford made his statement after his first attempt to popularize the old-fashioned polka and quadrille at costume party given at the Harbor Beach Casino.

Lansing—An elaborate road-building show will be held in Grand Rapids, Oct. 28 to 30, it was announced here by officials of the Michigan Association of County Road Commissioners and Engineers. The State Highway department will co-operate.

Marshall—Mayor Harold C. Brooks has announced that he will inaugurate a campaign to make Marshall a more beautiful city. He has engaged John Bell, of Chicago, a graduate landscape architect from Pennsylvania State college, to supervise the work.

Owosso—Owosso's school tax rate will be the lowest this year it has been since 1921. The rate is $15.16, compared with $17.39 in 1921-22. Meanwhile, three new schools have been built. The budget this year amounts to $250,000 or $25,000 lower than it was a year ago.

Pontiac—C. E. Tilotson was re-elected school trustee by a vote of 339 against George Richardson, 235, and F. Homer Newton, 285. His term is for three years. The vote was the largest ever polled in Pontiac. The proposal to supply free textbooks in the schools of the city was defeated by a vote of 419 to 377.

Flint—Chief of Police James Cole of Flint, whose department is among the pioneers in the United States in the use of radio for tracing criminals, will keep in touch with his work while he is at the convention of the International Association of Police Chiefs at Indianapolis, by means of the local wireless station.

Saginaw—The prosecutor's office is considering what action to take relative to Sunday night dancing in this county. Two places, Riverside park and Indiantown, operated in defiance of the old "blue law." Officers took the names of a number of persons who were present. The dances were orderly and well patronized.

Kalamazoo—At the end of the first ten days of the summer session, Western State Normal has the largest enrollment in the history of the school's summer terms, according to John C. Hoekje, registrar. The total enrollment to date is 1,902, which is 18 more than the record breaking enrollment of the 1924 summer term.

Detroit—Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck and H. E. Whittenberger, general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway lines west of Detroit and St. Clair Rivers, conferred on removing the company's tracks eastward for the stretch of several miles adjoining Woodward avenue south of Birmingham, where the company's present right-of-way is needed for the widening of Woodward avenue.

Alpena—Each year traffic counts have shown a steady increase in travel on the state highways in the vicinity of Alpena, and this year will be no exception to the rule, as evidenced by the report of one road patrolman south of Mikado, who counted 726 automobiles passing on M-10 within a period of two hours. The counts are used by the state to determine the wear on the roads and amount of maintenance needed.

Spring Lake—More than 50 resorters at this fashionable summer resort narrowly escaped death when the ferry boat Comet, operated on Spring Lake, between here and Grand Haven, caught fire some distance from shore while making a trip. The flames spread so rapidly that the crew barely had time to bring the boat to the dock here before it was enveloped in fire. All of the passengers jumped ashore, unharmed.

Marquette—The state prison commission is searching for some more effective way of keeping criminals within the walls of the branch prison here. A plan to place a high voltage wire fence along the top of the present prison wall is being considered, according to Alton T. Roberts, a member of that body. Construction of a sharply barbed overhanging fence also has been suggested. Governor Groesbeck is insisting that something be done and the commission is to act at once.

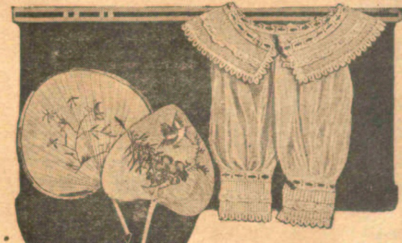
Menominee—Ruth Silvernale, 18 years old, a student at Northwestern University and a daughter of John L. Silvernale, superintendent of the Menominee schools, and Wellsley McCormick, 18 years old, a student at Culver Military academy, and a son of G. W. McCormick, president of the Menominee River Sugar Co., were rescued from drowning when their sail-rigged cat-boat tipped over a mile from shore here. The rescue was effected by members of the crew of the U. S. gunboat Wilmington.

Kalamazoo—Plans are being completed by the extension department of Western State Normal school for a field trip through northern Michigan, in charge of Dr. L. A. Kenoyar, of the department of biology. It is expected that 25 students will make the trip, credit for which will be given toward the life certificate and the bachelor of arts degree. The party will start from Kalamazoo August 8. Points of interest to be visited and studied include the Intelochen state park Torch and Elk lakes and biological station at Douglas lake.

Camp Custer—Secretary of Labor James L. Davis inspected Camp Custer recently. Greeted by a salute of 19 guns he was escorted on a tour of inspection by Colonel Cromwell Stacey and Colonel Morris M. Keck. He expressed approval on the exceptional condition of the camp and splendid training the men were receiving. Preparations have been completed for the comfort and welfare for 3,400 boys of the Citizens Military Training camp who will arrive here July 23. Colonel Stacey is commanding officer in absence of General Poore.

Pretty Things that are made at Home

IN THE matter of dress accessories, there is no doubt that costume flowers and neckwear hold the center of the stage in current styles and that the management of color is the most important factor in their success. In scarfs, midsummer has brought with it some new features—the ensemble idea is discernible everywhere, and is reflected in scarfs of chiffon with hand-painted borders that repeat the decorative design in the dress they accompany. Crepe de chine scarfs take their cue from felt or fabric sports hats to match, painted sometimes with little landscapes or water views. Hand painting in cubist or flowered patterns, in vivid or pastel colors, flourishes on gowns, hats and scarfs and invites the amateur artist to try her skill. The scarfs have picot edges.



Some Late Accessories.

Next to the scarf the jabot and collar and sleeve sets are important. These are made of lace or net and lace combinations and the jabot is attached to either round or high collar along the edge of a length of insertion or tucked net. A collar and sleeve set of tucked net and lace is shown in the picture. Narrow lace and a heavy beading are used—the beading carrying baby ribbon in black. With the vogue for long sleeves these new under sleeves prove very useful, worn under three-quarter length sleeves in the frock, because they can be easily kept clean.

Costume flowers employ both ribbons and millinery flowers—mostly the latter—and are used on the majority of afternoon dresses and practically all evening dresses. Nothing flourishes with equal exuberance except the boutonniere. Everybody wears a flower of some sort, pinned somewhere, about the neck or on the coat lapel. Gardenias, chrysanthemums, roses, pansies, and many other blossoms finish the summer costume.

Even palm leaf and other plain fans come in for a colorful finishing touch in the hands of beauty-loving women. A palm-leaf fan is shown in the picture with a floral pattern sketched on it with bright silk floss and a small heart-shaped bamboo fan is painted with flowers and a bright-winged bird.

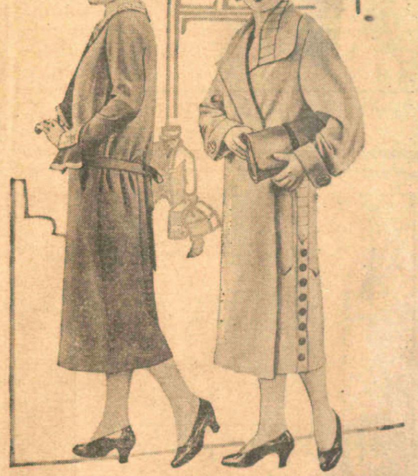
But the small palm-leaf fan is at its prettiest when it is trimmed with narrow satin ribbon and finished with ribbon or millinery flowers. Ribbon about an inch and a half or two inches wide in any desired color is used for winding the handle and making a finishing bow at the top of the handle. Here a cluster of flowers or a little nosegay is posed. The binding is usually shirred on and the fans may be painted, but are pretty anyway.

To Americans journeys in vacation time are as much a matter of course as three meals a day. Means for getting somewhere else and back are more and more convenient and practical and nearly every one travels.

The most experienced travelers—the globe trotters—have learned to travel light; that is, they go unencumbered by any unnecessary luggage. Blithely now the up-to-date nomad takes her suitcase in hand, throws her coat over her arm and starts to Europe or around the world and always manages to look well dressed.

The foundation of her wardrobe is found to be a plain tailored suit, a practical cloth dress, a smart, cozy and serviceable coat and a more or less simple street hat, chosen according to the length of her journey. Her suit is likely to be of tweed, her dress of jersey or twill or kasha and her coat of twill or a pile fabric. A black satin and a white crepe de chine skirt and several pretty blouses tell the story of her dressier clothes, and such is the light and filmy character of these and her underthings that they take up little room. "Luggage" and "tuckaway" hats that can be flattened out when not on duty and carried in a suitcase afford a change of headwear. They are made of silk or other fabrics and are shapely when adjusted to the head. Even the umbrella and small camera are stowed away with other belongings. As for accessories—the fewer the better unless they are "built in" the dress or blouse as in the frock shown at the left of the picture. This is a straight-line affair, with collar and cuffs of embroidered crepe de chine and a jabot and sleeve frills of plaited crepe like the frock in color. But there are any number of designs in frocks of this kind that are easy to get off and on with simple fastenings. These are points to be considered by the traveler. Once on and fastened they are complete in themselves—and good looking.

The coat at the right has the same commendable features—it is practical and attractive and roomy enough to be worn over a suit if needed for warmth.



New Styles for Travel Wear.

Twill is very practical for traveling coats and so are the various soft suede-finished or pile fabrics.

A short journey may require less shaving down of one's belongings, but if it is to be a sight-seeing trip much luggage is a bother. Besides if the worst comes to the worst and no porter is at hand the lighter the baggage the better.

Pink and Black

A color innovation in millinery is the use of black and pink instead of black and white where it is desired to relieve the all-black. Age determines the shade of pink that is considered appropriate to the wearer. The shades of pink vary from shell to old rose.

Coats Are Shorter

Coats that are a few inches shorter than the frock are most frequently seen, though there is a tendency toward shorter models.

Ribbon Hem

The straight-line gown of printed crepe de chine has godets set in to make the frilly flare now so popular. The hem on these frocks frequently is an inch band of ribbon in harmonizing or contrasting shades.

Tub Silks for Sports

Tub silks are very much in vogue for sports wear, and when the fabric is striped, horizontal and vertical effects are combined in a most attractive manner.

Farmers Will Study M. S. C. Test Fields

Guided by special tour routes, which are to be lined out by arrows and signs, thousands of Michigan farmers will inspect the extensive experimental fields at M. S. C. on Friday, July 31.

While the entertainment side of the farm day is being given a lot of attention this year, the fact that most of the visitors will be interested in the scientific agricultural work at the college is not being lost sight of by those in charge of arrangements. Inspection trips to various parts of the 1,200 acre farm so planned as to "take in" the most interesting features, are being carefully outlined.

Hundreds of acres of crops and soils test work, forest nurseries and woodlots, truck gardens, orchards, the livestock barns, and the college buildings themselves are included in some one of the several optional tours which will be ready for inspection.

The horse pulling contest, using the new dynamometer, will rival the tours for morning interest, while everything will center around the big open air meeting in the afternoon. The general meeting is scheduled to start at one o'clock eastern time, and will include various entertainment features in addition to the strong speaking program.

As usual, farmers are being urged "bring the whole family" to the July 31 conference. Farmers Day really takes the form of a big informal picnic, the entire family finding interest in the day's program

President Kenyon L. Butterfield of the M. S. C. is to address the seventh annual meeting of the Michigan Potato Growers Exchange during its gathering at Cadillac on August 19 and 20, according to announcement just made here. It will be Dr. Butterfield's first appearance before the potato growers. The exchange is a cooperative marketing organization numbering more than 7,500 state farmers among its members.

Gone Before

By request of the friends we are publishing the following obituary, which should have appeared before but it was accidentally sent to Hudson.

Again the silent messenger's power is felt, severing the silver cord of the life of Mary McGregor Rickard, who was born May 19, 1852 in Canandaigua, N. Y. the third of a family of eight children of Hamilton McGregor and wife, and entered into the realm of the eternal beyond from the home of her son, Otis, in Pittsford, dying of double pneumonia, June 10, 1925, aged 74 years.

Her relatives and a large circle of friends were shocked to learn of her quick response to the swift summons, when a loving Mother and a kind friend and neighbor was called hence by the death angel, and who has forever left the now wrecked earthly home in which she passed the 53 years since her marriage with Willard Rickard, Oct. 26, 1872, who preceded her into rest Dec. 13, 1910, leaving life's burdens for the faithful wife to bear alone. She was true to his memory and their family of three boys: Gaylord of Detroit; Otis of Pittsford, both grown to manhood, and who survive her, Howard W. having died in '84 aged 4 years; two sisters, two brothers, with several nephews and neices also are left to mourn the loss of one who will, be sadly missed.

Aching hearts were left behind as she stepped across death's river to join those gone before, now locked in dreamless slumber, and soon her entire family will meet face to face, in the long promised and now present Restitution Times, fully realizing the joys of the Kingdom, now come to earth, where His will shall be done perfectly, as in Heaven.

And Mother dear, as in thy grave
lowlying,
We lay thee down to rest in dreamless sleep.—
And winds, in twilight soft and dim
Sigh over thee their vesper hymn
We should not mourn, thou art at rest,
God's will be done, His ways are best.

Card of Thanks

We wish to express our sincere appreciation of Rev. McLouth's timely words of comfort, and the assistance and kindly sympathy of our friends and neighbors, manifested by their beautiful, gloom dispelling floral tokens and kindly services at the death and burial of our dear Mother and sister.

Repainting Automobiles

A new step towards progress in theautomobile industry has been reached by repainting experts who are now able to do in one or two days what formerly took two weeks or a month, according to L. Clayton Hill, sales manager for a large paint company here.

The resulting finish, he adds, has double or three times the life of the best repaint job of former years.

This is accomplished by a simple nitro-cellulose system which provides for instantaneous drying of the paint that is applied by means of an air brush. Materials used for repainting are of the nitro cellulose type and are quick drying in their nature.

The first step in this quick process is to thoroughly clean all the paint from the car. Then the first coat of varnish may be put on. Thirty minutes later the auto is ready for its second coat. The second coat, or gunglaze, takes several hours to dry thoroughly.

The third and final material used is the nitro cellulose enamel. Two or three coats of this finishing enamel are usually sufficient and, on account of the rapid drying properties, all enamel coats may be applied in one hour.

The Birth Of Prohibition

'Twas back in the days of 1873 in the small town of Hillsboro Ohio that 70 devoted women marched out in a snow storm the day before Christmas and prayed on their knees in front of the town's fifteen saloons. In the Dearborn Independent of July 11, 1925 is shown a picture of the scene taken from a rather ancient photograph. These women represented the sentiment at that time which was supposed to be present with cripples, women and old grannies, but today this very same sentiment is swaying our country from coast to coast, and is professed by not only old women, cripples and grannies but is looked upon by the masses as the coming salvation of the world. Our United States Commissioner of Prohibition, Roy A. Haynes, came from the town of Hillsboro and that explains why he is so earnest in the work. One of the women who knelt on that cold Christmas day in front of the grop shops was his grandmother and she was fully as sincere in her devotion to the cause of anti liquor as the illustrious grandson.

The striking originality of the affair in those days coupled with the town's respect for these God fearing women won the day, and it is claimed a propaganda was started which put every last saloon out of Hillsboro inside of four months time. Surely a Carrie Nation was not needed with her little hatchet just then but in due season she fulfilled her destiny.

Just a word concerning our able Commissioner of Prohibition: When Mr. Haynes was appointed to this office, President Harding had no less than fifty five applicants on the list for the job and every one of them he disregarded because he knew Mr. Haynes and he wanted a real man whom he could trust. Therefore he sent word to Mr. Haynes to come to Washington and there together he and the Chief Executive talked and canvassed the situation thoroughly. The task of watching America's big booze depository was not a desirable one and it is perfectly safe to gamble none would pick it out as the most pleasant, but Haynes felt much like the man who enlists to join the army—he was doing a real patriotic turn. As you will remember the country went officially dry on January 1, 1922, almost fifty years after the women of Hillsboro braved the wintry storm to convince wine bibbers they were on the wrong road.

Manufacture was simultaneously stopped leaving something like 300 bonded warehouses in this country filled to overflowing with the best of America's liquors, the work of guarding which fell to the appointed officers. Added to this, was the constant menace of moonshiners and home brewers who to this day are vindictive and troublesome—the denizens of every community in the United States.

With thousands of miles of Canadian border on our north the only separation between us and the soppers of Ontario, a vast conglomeration of human beings under Great Britian who have never known the curtailment of drinking, we are not surprised that occasionally the seething stinking mess boils over and slops into the United States In spite of man-made laws and State Police—in the eyes of the best dry navy in the world, these bootleggers and wet jobbers get across with thousands of cases of Canadian made liquors each year. But this fact need not discourage the faithful in the least—the fact is the percentage is so small compared to the enormous army of people effected that it is almost an atom in the world.

The sentiment in Europe and England is getting slightly dryer, and in Canada there is a pronounced dry party. Living in hope we are never despairing of being able to shut off the importation of liquors across our borders by Canada becoming dry. There is no reason why the people over there(our cousins as it were) will not in due season come to believe as a body that whisky and beer are bad.

Steamsr Rides Are Delightful

O. S. Dustin, general manager of the Ashley and Dustin Steamer line, foot of First street, Detroit, announces that the Steamer Put In Bay will sail from Detroit direct to Cedar Point on Lake Erie, every Friday during the balance of the present season.

Steamer Put In Bay for six days of the week sails from the dock at the foot of First street at 9 a. m., for Put In Bay and Sandusky, and passengers desiring to visit Cedar Point cross on the ferry from Sandusky, but cannot return the same day on the Put In Bay. On Friday however, the Put In Bay leaves Detroit at 9 a. m. stops at Put In Bay and then proceeds directly to Cedar Point and on the return trip the steamer leaves Sandusky at 4 p. m., Cedar Point, 5:30 p. m., Put In Bay at 7 p. m. and arrives in Detroit at 10:30 p. m. This arrangement of the schedule permits a stay of four hours at Cedar Point

Cedar Point, Ohio, is one of the most popular summer resorts in the vicinity of Detroit. It is a beautifully wooded paninsula with a bathing beach on the Lake Erie side of fine clean sand eight miles long. The board walk parade of wealth and beauty rivals Atlantic City. In a season of less than 90 days Cedar Point is visited by more than a million people. An attractive innovation of the preseut season is night bathing. made possible by the installation of a battery of flood lights which will permit bathing until midnight or after.

Summer-Time Radio Arrives

Fans and Broadcasters Prepare for the Summer Season's Big Events.

By E. E. BUCHER

General Sales Manager, Radio Corporation of America

Radio waves do not cease to travel through space just because the first signs of warm weather are at hand. Nor do broadcasters cease their efforts to entertain just because the enticing air of the great outdoors filters into their studio. Nor, again, does your receiving set, which has done so well during the long and dreary winter months, cease to obey the command of its user with the advent of the outdoor season.

Radio broadcasting continues to pursue its useful end in summer as well as winter. And granted that winter conditions are, in some measure, more ideally suited to radio transmission and reception, recent progress in radio has been so farreaching as to go a long way toward offsetting the original radio handicaps of the good old summer time.

A Condition of The Mind

Unannounced, atmospheric electricity has put in an appearance somewhat earlier this year than last, with apparently no serious effect; at least, radio listeners have failed to register complaints about the early arrival of static. This pleasing state of affairs would seem to indicate one of two things—or both, for that matter: first, ways and means have been introduced to reduce the heretofore annoying effects of the "muck of space" on radio broadcasting, and secondly, the fans' indifference to the delights of summer-time radio has been largely a condition of the mind and not altogether the fault of radio itself or, again, of the ether—that intangible medium which supplies the unlimited paths for the radio waves.

A number of broadcasting stations today are operating on an antenna rating greatly in excess of the power used last year. The power in many instances, has increased ten-fold. This implies a ten-fold increase in the signal strength at the receiving end. The majority of these high-power stations are located in the outskirts of the city with which they are individually identified—miles from the congested metropolitan areas with their masses of steel-framed buildings. In consequence their energy may radiate to better advantage. Today no part of the United States remains unserved by one or more broadcasting stations which, due to their proximity, may be considered practically as "locals," as distinguished from "DX" or distant stations.

"Not How Far But How Well"

In receiving from local stations during the summer-time the radio listener has the advantage of a high signal level as compared with the relatively low signal level from distant stations. It is to be expected, therefore, that the program originating at distant points during exceptionally warm, unsettled weather, when the atmosphere is surcharged with electricity will prove less desirable from the standpoint of clearness and freedom from mutilation than the local program.

It is a good rule, during the summer-time, to be satisfied with local programs. The winter-time offers an opportunity to test one's skill in tuning in far off stations, but once warm weather is here, the radio enthusiast should aim to get clean signals with a minimum of interference from local stations. Not how far, but how well, should be the summer-time slogan, of the radio fan.

"Super-Reception" for Summer

The development of the Super Heterodyne receiver is proving a real boom to summer-time radio. This receiver, operating in conjunction with a loop wave-interceptor, is remarkably free relatively from local static disturbances. The loop is directional, and since stray interference originates from definite sources on most occasions, the rotation of the loop will disclose a better signal-static ratio than is possible with the usual form of non-directional antenna system. Furthermore, the Super-Heterodyne receiver is highly selective, incorporating a series of tuned circuits, which "weed-out" undesired discharges to a considerable extent.

Not alone in radio receivers, but in loud-speaker design as well, have radio engineers endeavored to meet the demand for better summer reception. The early "tinny" horn type of loud speaker had a tendency to ring under the influence of the whip-crack impulse of static, thus aggravating the disturbances. The trend in loud-speaker design of late has been towards the elimination of sharp tuning peaks.

The Question of The Most Suitable Antenna

Interesting results may be obtained with small, indoor antennae during the summer season. In fact, the veteran radio listener generally makes use of an indoor antenna during the summer months; an indoor antenna may be nothing more than fifty feet of wire tucked behind the picture moulding around a room. If the radio listener has been using an exceptionally large outdoor antenna, one of 100 feet and over in length—it may be well to try a shorter outdoor antenna.

Exit Jupiter!

The more timid folks tear down their antenna with the first rumblings of thunder, yet these same timid folks fail to tear down telephone and lighting wires, plumbing fixtures, rain gutters and drain pipes. The properly erected antenna, suitably protected, is a highly efficient protection and not a hazard as some believe. Perhaps it is the lightning-like symbol employed in radio literature or the very mystery of radio that causes such apprehensions. However, now that popularized radio is in its fifth year and lightning has failed to work widespread havoc among the forests of antennae throughout the width and length of this country, it is time that this lightning fable should be forgotten What is the radio antenna? First, it is an excellent conductor of electricity, swinging high and clear of surrounding objects. Secondly, it is connected to the ground through a tiny air gap or vacuum gap of the lightning arrester. Many will recall the old time lightning rods, with their barbed spikes surmounting the roof of the house, their heavy cables kept clear of the building, and their positive ground connections. The modern radio antennae is nothing more than a modified lightning rod. And in actual practice it serves in much the same capacity. A radio antenna properly installed—which means that a lightning arrester of approved type should be used—will protect surrounding property.

Summer-Time Programs for Summer-Time Folks

And don't think for a moment that you can do without the radio during the summer. No matter whether you are doomed to stay in the city or are fortunate enough to spend your time in the mountains or at the seashore, you cannot afford to dispense with radio this summer of all summers.

Radio broadcasters have the interests of their audience more at heart than is generally supposed. Thus for the past month or two studio managers have been planning their summer programs so as to adapt them to the needs and interests of the listener in the summertime. Among this summer's programs there will be the leading sporting events, play by play, which we cannot afford to miss. There are to be timely talks on tennis, swimming, basketball and other games. There are to be talks on fishing and hunting. There are to be talks on automobiles and touring. And music! Imagine trying to get along without dance music and the latest songs and a little opera thrown in for good measure! Even the home-builder, whose thoughts gently turn to shingles and cement and plumbing with the approach of warm weather, will get some real advice via radio.

The summer-time programs of this year are to be just as indispensable as those of last winter. So, as far as programs are concerned, summer time radio is here.

Let Radio Be Your Mary's Lamb

Let's take a leaf from the little story about Mary's lamb. Now that vacuum tubes operate on dry batteries, which means a reduction in weight, radio can go anywhere. In fact, summer-time radio has decided advantages over winter radio in this direction. During winter-time, the radio set must be confined to the home, in the living room, or den, as the case may be. It is more or less fixed in this location. But with the advent of warm weather, the radio set may be moved about. It will prove a decided novelty to listen to radio in an outdoor setting, even though it may be no farther from home than the porch or the garden. The reverberation or blurring echo which is present in a closed room will not be present when the set is taken outdoors, and the general background of the signal [illegible] be pleasingly modified.

Of course the entire radio set need not be carried out on the porch or into the garden. The set may be left where it is, and a long double conductor cord run out to the porch or garden where the loud-speaker is located. For that matter, the idea of wiring a home for radio is gaining more and more ground; and nothing prevents the radio enthusiast from extending the radio wiring to the porch and the garden, so that the loud-speaker may be used wherever the family gathers.

This far we have dealt only with home conditions. But radio today is ready to follow the radio enthusiast to the summer resort, the mountain camp, on the canoe trip, in the automobile during a long tour—everywhere, in short. The portable receiving set is coming into its own, and this summer will see radio sets everywhere. Many an otherwise lonesome camp will be cheered up by radio music direct from the Gay White Way; many a summer resort will have radio dances, with the music furnished by the city's jazz artists; many a river or lake or harbor will be alive with beautiful music, wafted across the silvery water from a compact portable receiver aboard house boat or canoe or motorboat.

THE completion of the new Chicago Union Station marks a noteworthy accomplishment in the history of important engineering undertakings, from which travelers from all parts of the United States will derive pleasure and benefit.

The station is without doubt one of the finest and most efficiently designed railroad terminals in the world. It forms a vital link in the realization of the "Chicago City Beautiful Plan." Simplicity, accessibility and convenience for the traveling public are the essential virtues of the new terminal. Rest and recreation rooms, ticket offices, barber shop, dining rooms, stores of various kinds, and almost every convenience known to travelers, are to be found on the one level, no steps to climb.

The main station is a low monumental type of building with a row of massive columns of classic design along the entire east front. Once inside, the traveler finds himself in a gigantic waiting room more than 100 feet high and brilliantly lighted through skylights in the great arch ceiling. Colonnades inclose the room, the walls of which are patterned after the architecture of ancient Rome. Bordering this room are the ultra-complete passenger terminal facilities. An innovation in railway terminal design is a conference room accommodating 125 people, which is available, without charge, to patrons of the Union Station lines for conferences and other meetings.

To give some idea of the immensity of the new station, it may be stated that the main building covers an area of about three acres with a concourse covering 60,000 square feet. The entire terminal facilities cover more than 35 acres and will expedite the prompt and satisfactory handling of 50,000 passengers, 400 tons of baggage and 300 trains daily with room for future expansion. Fifteen acres of glass were used in the various coverings over the train sheds, which extend more than 1,200 feet beyond the main structure. A total of 17,000 tons of structural steel, 175,000 cubic feet of Indiana limestone and 10,000 cubic feet of granite were used in the station building and concourse. The foundation consists of 449 cylindrical concrete piers from four to ten feet in diameter, reaching to a depth of more than 60 feet below the level of the Chicago river.

Those who have had the privilege of inspecting the new station pronounce it a marvel in terminal construction and are urging their friends to see it on their next visit to Chicago.

The station is used jointly by the Pennsylvania Railroad; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., and the Chicago & Alton R. R.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

One Pair Of Child's Stockings-Price "Three Whiskies And Two Beers"

In view of its enthusiastic proclamation, "Prohibition is a Failure!" the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, Inc., appears to be prodigiously "het up" on the subject—almost as agitated as though prohibition had proved a 100 percent brake on the bibulous and so had deprived the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, Inc., of its great task of saving a decadent degenerate and condemned nation from the evils of temperance and sobriety.

As we and, we believe, many others have understood, the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, Inc., has decried the saloon with at least the same fervor as have the most ardent white ribboners. And yet—and yet, in a circular of the organization we read:

"The people of the United States struck down the saloon with such a blow as to scatter the evils of alcoholism into the homes and to the degradation of the youth of our land."

So, from this sentence, one gathers two sad facts: The youth of our land are degraded, and their degradation is due to the destruction of the saloon. Eheu! The people long have sought the cause of the nation wide degradation of the youth of our land. Gazing in grief at the great procession of healthy robust, well-clothed and happy youths and maidens marching to the class rooms of the schools, the people have pondered the reason for this widespread degradation. Their degradation, undoubtedly, is due to the fact that pater familias now works for his family, instead of toiling for the saloon-keeper. He takes sobriety and contentment to his home, instead of rushing his pay envelope to the saloon cash register. He sets an example of decency, instead of dissipation. No wonder his children are indescribably degraded. Of course, the reader and his friends have known and mourned their children were degraded; now they may learn that this is because abolition of the saloon has "scattered the evils of alcoholism" into their new dissolute homes.

The inestimable benefits of the saloon—moral, mental and physical—still are treasured in the recollection of thousands of its beneficiaries, especially hard working mothers and children who have not yet recovered from the effects of its philanthropic ativities. Time was, in the day of the keg and bottle, when the mother had not the wherewithal to feed or clothe the family; she rejoiced in the sacrifice, in the knowledge that the money was needed by the saloon keeper and his family for the luxuries of life. Then pater familias frequented "the poor man's club" and contributed his family's money to its support; now the miserable wretch takes his smiling wife and their degraded offspring to the movies, or else drives in delirious intoxication through the country with them in the family automobile The sight—the very thought is fearsome!

One of the most illuminating and convincing "temperance" arguments once was concretely displayed in a show window on New York avenue, near Fourteenth St., N. W., Washington, D. C., the nation's capital, now described by the wet Association circular as "the most notoriously wet place in the United States." In this window, one recalls, were many articles of women's and children's wearing apparel and toys, decorated with appropriate price tags. And how were these articles labeled? On a pair of women's shoes was the sacrilegious "price", "one quart of whisky"; on a little toy for a child was the label, "five beers"; the tag on a child's tiny, warm stockings proclaimed "three whiskies and two beers." And so on through a hundred items. The significance of that argument now is appreciated. The "three whiskies and two beers" have been literally translated into stockings for the degraded little child, soon to grow into the still more degraded youth because of this wicked perversion of its father's weekly wage! The situation is horrendous!—good cause for the wailing, not to say gnashing of teeth of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment.

To say that the closing of the saloons by any "blow" has scattered the evils of alcoholism into the homes is, of course, far from the fact. To assert that it has occasioned the "degradation" of youth, even assuming that there is such "degradation", is equally untruthful.

"The laws and habits of people must be in unison, or a nation of hypocrites and liars results," adds this precious circular. First, one may cite, the "habits" of people never are in unison, and hence the American principle that the wishes of the majority must be respected above those of the minority. Uncontrovertible—we think this Association will find—prove that a majority of the United States, in both population and area, was dry on its own initiative, by legislation and practice, before prohibition was adopted as a national policy. At all events, the forty eight states had the choice presented to them. Thus, the law is in unison with the habits of a majority of the people.

"One hundred and seventy persons died last year in Denver from acute alcoholism, compared with five deaths in 1915," adds the circular in question. It also might have said that other hundreds in the land died from drinking poison liquor. Of course, under the prohibition amendment and enforcement law, these persons were compelled to drink. Law held their noses and forcefully poured the liquor, or poison, down their throats As sensible, law abiding citizens, of course, they turned cheerily to the bottle and trod blithely down the path, as unfortunate victims of a vicious law, toward the undertaker's and, maybe, the Potter's field. One of the worst things about prohibition legislation undoubtedly is the fact that it "forces" certain folks to drink—"drives them to drink," we believe, is the wet expression. Mayhap, it is the law which punishes murder, that drives men and women to homicide. Equally logical is the assertion or deduction, that the law against stealing drives men and women to peculation.

Unfortunately, space limitations prevent the Manufacturers Record from broadcasting more widely the propaganda of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, Inc., as expressed in the Association's circular. It is a noble work in which its members are engaged—a work in which, individually and collectively, they well may take pride. Even if only the saloon can be restored and the youth of America be saved from further degradation and the evils of alcoholism be removed from the American homes, a great, grand and good work will have been well accomplished. It must ever be remembered that the noble souls thus engaged are using their utmost power to send men and women, boys and girls to destruction here and hereafter, despite their demands for "personal liberty" so called, "the airest bubble that ever found lodgment in an empty head."

In the list of members of this Association we find the name of W. W. Atterbury, vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who however, would not dare to permit any engineer on his line to partake of intoxicating drinks. We once requested Mr. Atterbury to explain how he reconciled his position against prohibition with his position of enforcing prohibition upon his own employes, but the answer was silence. The president of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, Inc., is manager of a steamship line. We wonder if he encourages his engineers and captains to drink freely of the accursed stuff whenever and wherever they please. If so, we would not care to risk a trip on any of his boats.

May Take Seed Crop Of Alfalfa In State

A chance for many farmers of the state to harvest a profitable alfalfa seed crop this year, if they see fit to let part of the second crop go for seed, is shown by observations made throughout the state by members of the crops department at M. S. C.

Conditions so far have been excellent for the development and pollination of the alfalfa flowers, says Prof. J. F. Cox, of the college staff. If the same condition continves, a heavy set of seed should develop where the alfalfa is not cut for hay. Many alfalfa growers find it profitable to allow part of their alfalfa acreage to make a seed crop Michigan grown seed has met with unusual favor during the past few years and is in strong demand, particularly the Grimm, Hardigan and the LeBeau varieties.

The second crop should be cut for seed when fifty to seventy five percent of the seed pods are brown After curing for a week or ten days or longer it is ready for threshing, using the ordinary clover huller with alfalfa seed screens.

Yields of from one to five bushels per acre are secured. Under favorable conditions, an average yield of three bushels of seed can be expected. The straw secured from threshing makes excellent roughage for cattle feeding.

Dry weather at blooming time usually favors seed production, and to date general seasonal conditions would lead us to expect an unusally favorable alfalfa seed year for Michigan.

The clover seed crop of the state will undoubtedly be short; hence, wherever alfalfa shows a promise of setting seed it should prove a dependable crop.

Japanese Houses Clean

The Japanese house is as immaculate as a bandbox. The clumsy wood sandal is removed and placed on the doorstep where it serves to signify to callers that the owner of the house is home and keeps the floor unsoiled with its beautiful matting. There is little or no furniture to collect dust; clothes are stored in chests built in the walls, and shelves are built in the kitchen for culinary articles. A porcelain vase of flowers may decorate the living room.

STOP WASTING--OR FACE PAUPERISM

By WILLIAM E. KNOX

President, American Bankers Association

William E. Knox

The American standard of living, the highest in the world, came easily in the past from the abundance of our natural wealth, but it can be maintained in the future only by drastic national economy in the use of that wealth. We have grown up to our resources. We can not afford to waste them any longer. Industrially we have got to stop wasting, but even more so have we got to stop the wastefulness of our personal habits.

The paramount challenge to education in America today calls for the effective teaching of personal economics—for education in the management of personal incomes so that they will give every individual a good living during his productive years and provide certain security for the nonproductive years of his old age.

Forty-four million people, two-fifths of our population, are gainfully employed in the United States, earning more than $60,000,000,000 annually. The management of the expenditure of this $60,000,000,000 annual pay check is the biggest and most important business in America. It has been estimated that upwards of $10,000,000,000 of this personal income is wasted annually. More than a billion, it is estimated, disappears in foolish speculation in fake schemes.

The spirit of waste in America is a heritage of the past, but today the country has more than one hundred and fourteen million people to support and no nation's resources can withstand extravagance indefinitely. An increase in population will mean a reduced average of personal wealth unless intelligent management maintains a progressively more economic utilization of the national income.

To teach our people this is the task of education and it can not begin to meet the task a moment too soon. The advance of civilization makes man's existence a more and more serious business. Human responsibilities and duties increase each year. If progress has made life more abundant it has also made it more expensive. It is impossible for most men to increase their real wages. Therefore they must meet their added responsibilities out of more economic employment of what they get.

Cost of Poor Lighting

Investigators of lighting matters assert that the production in American factories can be increased by two and a half billion dollars through better lighting. This superior lighting is something, they add, that electricity is especially qualified to contribute.

TOMMY MEETS THE KING

SYNOPSIS. — In London the teller of the story of the adventures of "King Tommy" and known hereafter as "Uncle Bill," is informed by Lord Norheys, son of an old friend, that Lord Troyte, head of the British foreign office, Norheys' uncle, has a scheme to make him (Norheys) king of Lystria, in central Europe, through marriage to Calypso, daughter of King Wladislaws, deposed monarch of that country. A financier, Procopius Cable, knows there is oil in profusion in Lystria, and with an English king on the throne the output could be secured for England. Norheys, in love with a stage dancer, Viola Temple, is not enthusiastic over the proposition. The patriarch, Menelaus, highest ecclesiastical dignitary in Lystria, is heartily in favor of the restoration of the monarchy, and Cable has generously financed the sentiment. Calypso is making a living dancing in the "Mascotte," Berlin cabaret. Norheys refuses to entertain the idea of giving up Viola Temple, to whom he is secretly engaged. "Uncle Bill's" sister Emily urges him to secure a passport from Lord Troyte for a certain Janet Church, strong-minded female who wants to visit Lystria in the interests of a society for world peace. Janet Church leaves for Berlin. "Uncle Bill" is again appealed to by his sister to find a certain curate (name not given) who has left his parish in Ireland for a visit to Berlin, and cannot be found. Lord Norheys and Viola Temple disappear from London. Procopius Cable receives information that Norheys, with the princess, has left there on his way to Lystria, but Norheys appears with the former Viola Temple, now his wife. The question is, "Who is the man who has gone to Lystria with the Princess Calypso?" Casimir introduces himself, and Janet Church, vainly seeking from the British consulate a passport to Lystria, becomes acquainted with the two men in the Adlon hotel. Tommy mistakes Casimir for a hotel thief and refuses him admission to his room. Casimir insists on Tommy dining at the Mascotte. Tommy again meets Janet in a telephone booth, where he had gone in an attempt to escape from Casimir. Janet Church, thinking Casimir can be instrumental in securing her passport, urges Tommy to introduce her. He finally agrees, she to pose as his aunt. Tommy and Janet visit the Mascotte that evening. When Tommy arrives at the Mascotte he is astonished at the attention given him by the head waiter and his aids. Calypso dances before the diners and at the end of her performance she throws a note to Tommy.

CHAPTER IX

Tommy picked up the note.

Before he could open it he was aware that Janet Church was standing beside him. In the excitement which followed the princess' dance she had managed to leave her humble table and make her way unhindered across the room.

"You promised," she said, "to introduce me to Count Casimir."

Tommy remembered the promise, remembered also the form the introduction was to take. In the midst of the fantastic unreality of all that was happening to him there seemed nothing absurd in introducing Janet precisely as he had promised. Casimir was sitting beside him smiling gently.

"This," said Tommy, "is my aunt. Allow me to introduce her to you."

The count stood up, bowed, took Janet's hand and kissed it. He showed not the slightest sign of ever having seen her before, though he must have recollected the pink dressing gown and quilted slippers in the corridor in the morning. He did not seem to feel that Janet in her shabby frock was out of place at the Mascotte. By not so much as the tremble of an eyelid did he show his astonishment that Tommy had brought an aunt with him to Berlin.

"I'm very glad to meet you, Count Casimir," said Janet. "There's something I want you to do for me. I'm sure you can do it if you will. I am, as I dare say you know, acting as continental representative of the Federation for the Promotion of World Peace Through the Union of Christian Churches."

Casimir bowed again. Not even his knowledge of Shakespeare was sufficient for a quotation suitable to follow Janet's speech.

"The Patriarch of Lystria," said Janet, "is one of the leaders of the Christian churches whom we are most anxious to enlist in our movement. Unfortunately, our Foreign office—"

Casimir glanced appealingly at Tommy. The sudden appearance of this spinster aunt startled him. Her intention of interesting the patriarch in a matter of which he had never heard bewildered him.

Tommy made no reply to the unspoken appeal. He turned and walked away.

The entertainment at the Mascotte was evidently over. The men and women who had dined or supped there rose from their tables and passed out of the room. Tommy edged his way through the procession of departing people and found a quiet place where there was still light enough for reading. He opened the note which the princess had flicked onto his plate, and read:

"Go back to London and marry Viola Temple. Calypso."

Tommy stared at the words. He did not know any one called Viola Temple. He had certainly no intention of marrying any one of that name. Indeed, I do not think he ever heard the name before. Of course, it was well enough known in London, and since her friendship with Lord Norheys became notorious, the lady's picture had been in all the illustrated papers. But Tommy lived in a remote corner of Ireland. He heard no social or theatrical gossip, and seldom saw a paper except the Irish Times, which does not publish pictures of dancing girls.

Nor did he understand why the girl in the Mascotte—by far the prettiest of all he had seen—should have singled him out among the men present to be the recipient of this note and this odd command. If Viola Temple had to be married, there must surely be some one more suited for the job than he was. He remembered the scornful glances which the girl had cast at him while she danced and the mocking obeisances of her curtsies. He wondered why on earth she did these things and what she could possibly know about him.

Then slowly a little understanding, a mere glimmer, came to him.

Casimir had promised that he should meet a lady at the Mascotte, had indeed brought him there for the purpose. Well, he had met Calypso. Casimir, speaking to him just before the dance, had called her, a princess, Princess Calypso. The title was no doubt a picturesque exaggeration intended as an advertisement. Tommy had heard of some one known as the "Queen of Song." Perhaps Calypso was the "Princess of Dancing," though he did not think that she deserved the title.

The whole thing was puzzling, confusing, utterly incomprehensible. Yet Tommy was glad that he had come to the Mascotte, very glad that he had seen the girl. She was—

Tommy always becomes incoherent when he tries to speak of his first feelings about Calypso. I do not wonder. He had all his life been accustomed to women like my sister Emily, some of them older than Emily, many of them of course younger. But all of them wise, sensible, respectable, like Jaeger underclothing, which though wholesome is not exciting. Calypso was utterly different. If I were to compare her to a garment—but I do not know enough about clothes to do that, and I am told that the best of these things are not exhibited in shop windows.

The fact is that Tommy, then and there, suddenly, abruptly, hopelessly, fell in love with Calypso. I do not profess to understand love at first sight. The six or seven love affairs I have experienced in life have all been gradual, a growth of feeling so slow that the lady had generally passed out of my reach—gone to Nice or Monte Carlo or somewhere for the winter before I found out that I was in love with her. But I am not a skeptic about the reality of these sudden passions. No sensible man can be. Literature gives us the cases of Romeo falling in love with Juliet, of Fanny Squeers falling in love with Nicholas Nickleby, and many others. In real life—at the moment I can only recall Garibaldi and Anita, but that is good enough. He fell in love when he was looking at her for the first time at a great distance through a telescope. Tommy had a better excuse than that.

Casimir tapped Tommy on the arm.

"His majesty," he said, "wishes to speak to you."

Tommy looked round. The room was almost clear of visitors, who had streamed off to finish a night's pleasure in the Palais de Dance next door.

Waiters were busy clearing away the debris of meals from the tables. Most of the lights had been put out. Janet Church was standing by herself beside the table where she had been introduced to Casimir. Tommy saw no one whom he recognized except the little head waiter. He was seated by himself at a table in a corner of the room with a bottle of champagne in front of him. Thus, it may be supposed, head waiters relax themselves and recuperate after their toils are over.

"His majesty waits," said Casimir.

He was standing very erect with his hands at his sides in a military attitude, of attention. With a side glance he indicated the head waiter. Tommy felt that he was living through some confused and fantastic dream—dancing girls transformed into princesses and head waiters into kings. Or perhaps—it seemed wildly improbable—this might be part of the evening's entertainment at the Mascotte, an original kind of harlequinade.

He walked slowly over to the table at which the head waiter sat. He was greeted with friendly cordiality.

"Sit down, my dear boy. Please sit down and have another glass of wine."

Tommy stared at him in amazement. Not at all in this familiar fashion had the head waiter treated him earlier in the evening. Then he glanced at Casimir who was standing stiffly to attention.

"There's such divinity doth hedge a king—" said Casimir.

"Explain, Casimir," said the head waiter. "Lord Norheys does not understand."

"Please," said Casimir, "you are in the presence of King Wladislaws of Lystria."

"But I don't keep up any pretense of etiquette here," said the king, "though Casimir insists on behaving as if we were still in Lystria. Do sit down."

Up to that moment Tommy had never heard the name of the king of Lystria. It was a very small state, and although it took the wrong side in the war, nobody paid much attention to it. He sat down.

"How did you like Calypso's dancing?" said the king. "Not much, eh! Well I don't think much of it myself. In fact, she wouldn't be dancing here if she wasn't a princess. That's what makes it worth while to employ her. These nouveaux riches are amazingly fond of royalty. In fact,"—he dropped his voice to a confidential whisper—"I should never have got the job of head waiter here if I hadn't agreed to Calypso's dancing. That's how it happens that she's here. Her salary isn't much. But my job as head waiter— However, we can talk of that later on. What I want to say to you now is that you'll have to be very careful with Calypso. She's got her knife into you about that other girl."

He chuckled pleasantly, and refilled his own glass and Tommy's.

"I don't mind a bit myself, of course," he said, "and Casimir doesn't mind. But Calypso! Why did you allow Miss Temple to write that letter to her? It's made things a bit difficult, you know. You'll have to reason with her a little. Pitch it strong. You might tell her perhaps that Miss Temple is over forty, and squints. That would soften things down a bit."

"I shall say," said Tommy, "that I never heard of Miss Temple in my life until this evening."

"If you can get her to believe that—" said the king doubtfully. "But I don't know. I never could get her mother to believe that. And Calypso is very like her in some ways. But perhaps you'll be more successful than I was. By the way, I suppose Miss Temple can dance. Do you think-- It might help to do away with any feeling of grievance that she may have— Do you think that she'd care for an engagement here in Calypso's place? We couldn't say she was a princess; but we might advertise her as the Marchioness of Norheys. Do you think she'd care for it?"

"I don't know her," said Tommy, "so I can't tell."

The king looked at him with twinkling eyes.

"You do it very well," he said, "far better than ever I did."

"Before you say anything more," said Tommy, "I want to tell you that you're mistaken about who I am. I'm not Lord Norheys, or Lord anything else. I'm Reverend Thomas A. Norreys, a curate."

"That's good," said the king, "distinctly original. I never thought of it. But you'll have to be very careful. It's not only Calypso. There's the patriarch too. You don't know him yet. But you will. He used to worry the life out of me about—well, about any Miss Temple I happened to be interested in at the time. And Calypso says she'll tell him directly she sees him. But perhaps you know how to manage the clergy. I never could."

"I've just told you that I am a clergyman myself."

"Well," said the king, "that may be all right. In fact, the patriarch will be pleased about it, if he hears nothing about Miss Temple. But if Calypso tells him, then I am afraid your being a clergyman will only make it worse, from his point of view. Simply from his point of view, of course. I don't mind a bit myself. In fact, I prefer clergymen with some little human failings. I'd have liked the patriarch better and got on better with him if there'd ever been—well, a Hagar, or some one of that sort. But there wasn't."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Wasteful Men

"Why, Jeremiah Jones!" exclaimed Mrs. Jones when her husband came in safe and sound from a railroad journey. "Is this you?"

"Why, of course," said her husband, "this is the time I expected to come home, isn't it?"

"And you haven't had an accident nor lost your arms and legs or been killed?"

"How many times must I tell you that nothing has happened?" said the irritated man.

"Well," declared the good lady, "you do beat all. There you went and paid good money for an insurance ticket just before you left, and you haven't done a thing to get the reward. That's money just wasted. Nice manager you are, Jeremiah Jones!"

Her Appetite Triumphed

Max Maretzek, the impresario, had a large repertoire of stories. Henry T. Finck, the music critic, repeats one of them in his new book, "Musical Laughs." Maretzek on a trip from Cincinnati to Baltimore, feeling hungry, bought a big sausage and a loaf of rye bread. Presently Christine Nilsson, in a seat ahead, made fun of him for eating such awful stuff. Max was really humiliated, but he slyly crowded the remnants of his feast into his pocket and, feeling quite comfortable went to sleep. About two o'clock in the morning he felt a touch on his elbow. "Hush," said Nilsson. "Don't wake anybody, but do give me that bread and sausage you put in your pocket."

No Method Yet Found to Prevent Hailstorm

The United States weather bureau says it is often asked whether there is not some way that hailstorms can be prevented. The answer, replies the bureau, is in the negative, Pathfinder Magazine reports. There is no known way to prevent hail. Much powder has been burned in Europe bombarding the clouds in a futile attempt to avert hailstorms. In some countries an elaborate technique has been developed, requiring the use of special types of mortars, bombs and rockets. In France before the World war it was customary to erect hail rods or "electric Niagaras." These were large copper lightning rods installed on high buildings and steel towers built especially for the purpose. A hundred years ago it was a common practice with Europeans to put up small hail rods, often consisting of poles with metal tips. These were erected in fields, gardens and vineyards. None of these methods, says the weather bureau, had any plausible scientific hypothesis behind them. Any effects ascribed to them were purely imaginary.

Worth Copying

A. T. Stewart, the merchant prince of his day, had one rule that he expected all clerks to follow. That rule was: "Correct any mistake on the spot." Such policy would be a good one for all of us to follow whatever the occasion.—Grit.

A man's vanity tells him what is honor, his conscience what is justice.

POULTRY

HIGH QUALITY EGGS IN SUMMER MONTHS

One of the biggest problems that faces the poultry producer is the production of high quality eggs through the summer months. The reason for this is the heat of the summer will start fertile eggs to incubate and thereby spoil the quality unless special effort is taken.

The biggest loss can be stopped by the production of infertile instead of fertile eggs. Supplementing and correlated with this effort to produce infertile eggs is the need for careful methods of collecting, storing and marketing.

It is a customary practice for the people who are in charge of enforcing the egg-candling laws to lift the requirements for candling during March and April, for the reason that during the heavy production season the eggs are marketed with good quality. The cool weather, plus the large supply, helps to maintain the good condition of the eggs marketed during this period.

Investigations show that at least two-thirds of the egg losses occur on the farm. The remainder is on the huckster wagons, in the country store, on hot freight and express cars and in improper storage. This loss has been estimated at $20 per farm in Missouri, and it is doubtless as high in the other heavy poultry-producing states.

No doubt the rooster is responsible for more of this loss than any other one contributing element. He eats high-priced feed during the summer without producing any benefit and does a great deal of harm in lowering the quality of the eggs. The movement to cull the rooster out of the flock is on as soon as the breeding season is over. The young cockerels can be best developed by keeping them separated from the flock, and feed and market them as soon as possible. The cockerels that are to be kept for breeding purposes can be developed better if kept separate from the main flock.

In addition to the loss resulting from the sale of fertile eggs, there is a further preventable loss from cracked eggs, dirty eggs, shrunken and bad-flavored eggs. These different losses may be lowered by feeding oyster shell, by having plenty of nests, by gathering the eggs daily, by packing them so they will not break and eating all odd-sized eggs at home. Bad flavors are usually caused by feeding unusual feeds or by keeping the eggs in a place where they absorb unpleasant odors.

Scurvy-Preventing Feed Manufactured by Fowls

It looks as if the chicken makes its own vitamin C or the vitamin which prevents scurvy in guinea pigs and humans, according to an investigation carried on at the Purdue university agricultural experiment station.

It appears that chickens do not have scurvy and can thrive for long periods on feeds that do not have the scurvy-preventing vitamin. Mature cockerels were given a ration containing none of this vitamin for over three months. Their livers and kidneys were then fed in small amounts to guinea pigs suffering from scurvy brought on by a lack of a vitamin-preventing scurvy. In about two weeks' time the guinea pigs were cured of scurvy by the livers and kidneys of these cockerels which had received none of the scurvy-preventing vitamin, thus indicating that the vitamin was manufactured by some means in the body of the chicken.

This suggests that the chicken can make this vitamin from sources not available to the guinea pig or to a person and that the lack of this vitamin in the diet of the chicken apparently does no damage. In practical poultry feeding, therefore, little attention need be paid to supplying the vitamin which prevents scurvy, although other vitamins are absolutely necessary and must be provided by the feeds given.

Poultry Notes

Losses from tuberculosis in chickens is usually greater in winter than in summer.

Chick specialists now recommend feeding egg yolk or cod liver oil to prevent leg weakness.

• • •

Experience shows that hens must have animal protein in order to lay prolifically. Milk, meatscraps and tankage are the animal proteins most available for feeding poultry.

• • •

Cracked barley can be included in the feed ration for chicks after they reach the age of five or six weeks.

• • •

It never pays to overcrowd hens—they need a comfortable house, dry and roomy, with plenty of fresh air and sunshine.

• • •

Grain feed such as sprouted oats, cabbage, turnips, beets and rape are necessary for the health of the pullets. A disease similar in symptoms to roup is sometimes caused by lack of green feed.

• • •

There are two objects in culling poultry, first, to determine the hen that is not laying, and second, to distinguish between the hen that has been a good producer and the one that has not laid enough to pay for her feed.

• • •

It is always possible to cull out the poor layers accurately. Conditions of management such as feeding, housing and sanitation, however, must be known by the person culling if the work is to be done accurately. The age of the bird must be considered also.

Loquacity Not Fault of Barrie

Jerome K. Jerome, who says Sir J. M. Barrie is the most silent man he ever met, relates the following story in the Strand Magazine:

Once a beautiful but nervous young lady was handed over to his care. With the sole au gratin, Barrie broke the silence:

"Have you ever been in Egypt?"

The young lady was too startled to answer immediately. It was necessary for her to collect herself. While waiting for the entree, she turned to him.

"No," she answered.

Barrie made no comment. He went on with his dinner. At the end of the chicken en casserole, curiously overcoming her awe, she turned to him again.

"Have you?"

A far-away expression came into Barrie's great deep eyes.

"No," he answered.

After that they both lapsed into silence.

It Was Up to Louie

"Spike, dear," pouted the bootlegger's wife, "it's getting awful hot here in town. Haven't you decided where we will spend the summer?"

"Not yet," said her fond husband. "Dat all depends on Louie. Dey pinched him yesterday."

"But," demanded his storm and strife, "what has Louie's arrest got to do with where we spend our summer?"

"It's got plenty to do!" was the reply of the family breadwinner. "If he stan's pat we spend de summer wit your Uncle Henry, but if he squawks we spend it with Uncle Sam."—Country Gentleman.

Tactful Husbands

From an English Book—"Newly married couples always decide to be tenderly considerate one to another, but as their rival unselfishness immediately begins to create friction, the husband, with his usual courtesy and foresight very soon withdraws from the contest and gracefully leaves his wife a monopoly of unselfish devotion. That is why so many couples get on splendidly together, and it is a fine tribute to the tact and good management, not to mention the foresight, of the husband."—Boston Transcript.

Women Lose Immunity

Women traveling between Canada and the United States will now be searched at some of the customs points by women inspectors. Female smugglers of liquor, cigarettes and jewelry have increased to such an extent that the modesty shown by the men inspectors had to be overcome. Miss M. A. Jamieson is the first woman inspector in the Canadian service.

They All Fly Nowadays

A heterogeneous crowd massed into Louisville for the Kentucky Derby. They swept down from the skies in airplanes, private railroad cars, costly limousines, the paddle-wheeled river boats, one-horse shays, and even on shank's ponies.—Associated Press.

Scotch Sugar Beets

Sugar beets planted in Scotland have given satisfactory results, and it is likely, in view of the subsidy granted by the government, that a factory will be built.

WOMAN'S BACK STOPPED ACHING

I Suffered Three Years. Relieved by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

St. Paul, Minn.—"I have a little girl three years old and ever since her birth I have suffered with my back as if it were breaking in two and I have felt as if something were falling out all the time. I also had dizzy spells and was sick at my stomach every month. I had read several letters of women in the newspapers and the druggist recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to my husband for me. As a result of taking it my back has stopped aching and the awful bearing-down feeling is gone. I feel stronger and do all of my housework and tend to my little girl. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills for constipation. I have recommended these medicines to some of my friends and you may use this letter as a testimonial if you wish. I will be pleased to answer letters of other women if I can help them by telling them what this medicine has done for me."—Mrs. PRICE, 147 W. Summit Avenue, St. Paul, Minnesota.
